IN THE BEE TO-DAY

WEATHER.

U. S. Department of Agriculture, Weather Bureau.

Toledo, O., 8 a. m., Feb. 20, 1892.

The "low" or storm center which was central near St. Louis yesterday, has disappeared, having merged into the "high" which was over the upper lakes yesterday, but which is now in New England. Rainfell yesterday throughout the country lying between the Gulf and the lake region, accompanied by abnormally high temperature. The temperature will continue about the same to-day, with threatening weather. Snow will probably fall Sunday in the lake region. This morning's map gives no hope of good weather for two or three days. This aspect would be changed should a high area develop in Texas to-night, which, however, is improbable. The "low" reported in Montana continues shallow and is stationary.

The coldest temperature reported to-day in the United States is 2 below at Fort Buford, Dak; the highest was 66 at New Orleans. The highest in Toledo yesterday was 38; the lowest this morning was 31. Total rainfall yesterday was 0.45 inches.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Forecast for Ohio—Cloudy weather and light rain or snow; northeasterly winds to-day and probably Sunday.

For Indiana and Illinois—Cloudy weather, with light rainor snow in southern portions; northeasterly winds; generally fair Sunday.

For Michigan and Wisconsin—Cloudy weather and northeasterly winds today; generally fair Sunday.

An Awful Crime Unearthed in New York.

Three Children, Two of Them Mere Babes,

Stripped of All Their Wearing Apparel

And Left in a Room to Starve and Freeze.

A Physician Accidentally Discovers Them in a Tenement Building and Turns Them Over to the Care of a Humane Society.

New York, Feb. 20.—Dr. Schultz, of the Presbyterian hospital staff, made an astounding discovery in an East Side tenement last night. He had been called to the tenement 476 East Thirty-ninth street, to attend a young girl who had been severely beaten by her father.

His prospective patient lived on the fifth floor and while the doctor was passing through the hallway on that floor he heard moaning. The sounds seemed to issue from a room next to that to which he was going.

After attending to the injured girl, the doctor investigated the matter. He burst open the door from which the sounds came, and a pitiful sight met his gaze.

Leaning against a stove, which had apparently been innocent of fire for many days, he saw a babe not more than ten months old, without a stitch of clothing upon its emaciated body.

Its eyes were half closed and it was moaning with pain.

A few feet away another naked child, a boy less than two years of age lay on the floor unconscious from the cold.

Crouched in a corner not far from the door was a negro boy about 8 years old, devoid of clothing, like his companions in misery, and close by his side, as if to keep the warmth in his wretched body, was a large mastiff, who feebly wagged his tail as the doctor entered.

The surgeon questioned the negro, the only one of the children old enough to talk, but the little fellow was so weak that he could hardly gasp out a dozen words.

From what he did say, however, it was learned that three children and the dog had been locked up without food since Monday night.

The boy said that a man had taken them to the room where they were found, stripped them of all their clothing, and locked the door upon them. The children were turned over to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, who will investigate the matter.

The whole affair is shrouded in mystery, as the tenants of the house in which the children were found say they know nothing of the case and were not aware that the children were in the room where they were found.

The white children found, seem from their appearance, to be of Italian parentage.

NOT SO SATISFACTORY.

A Shrinkage in Demand in Mercantile Circles.

A Gloomy Week in the Iron Trade—A General Review of Business for the Past Seven Days.

New York, Feb. 20.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The business situation is not quite so satisfactory or encouraging as it has been. While the gradual distribution of many lines of merchandise continues there is shrinkage in demand and much depression in iron, further decline in cotton blights hopes of revival in southern trade and the speculative mania, stimulated by cheap money and by the great success of the coal speculation now extends to wheat and threatens to restrict exports.

Notwithstanding the facts that exports of wheat have been diminishing and for four days of the present week have been only 800,000 bushels from Atlantic ports, while western receipts continue large, speculation at Chicago has lifted the price 6 1-2 cents during the week and sales here have been 57,000,000 bushels.

An advance from any cause which cuts off exports of breadstuffs at a time when Europe has heavy demands for stocks here would not be wholesome. Corn has declined 1-2 a cent with large exports but very large receipts.

Pork products, oats and coffee are substantially unchanged, and oil is only 1 1-8 cents higher on small transactions. Cotton is a shade lower, receipts being 24 per cent. greater for the week than last year, but exports 36 per cent. greater.

The week has been gloomy in the iron trade from pressure to realize on qualities of iron not well known or produced in excess of requirements. More inquiry appears for structural iron, beams selling at 2 1-2 cents, but bar iron is in light demand and weak, and for finished products generally the demand is disappointing. Since the large sales at 10 3-4 cents the copper market has been steadier, and tin and lead are strong. The coal market is very dull awaiting results of the combination.

The boot and shoe trade is steady and growing, though cutting of prices for boots has done no good, and shipments are still below those of last year.

In wool there is a distinct improvement in the demand for carpet use, since the slight advance in products by some makers and also in 1-4 or 3-8 blood wools because of the strong demand for cheviot goods. The spring demand for men's woolens is large, and many tardy clothiers find their orders being long delayed or refused. Trade in dress goods is also improving, though at this city there is much cutting in retail prices. Cotton goods are more active than in any previous week this year, and a few other grades have slightly advanced.

Domestic markets are oversupplied with money, and if nothing else can check the tendency to excessive speculation some exports of gold might be good. The value of all exports from New York for two weeks of February has been 27 per cent. larger than for the same weeks last year.

The business failures throughout the country during the past seven days number 229, as compared with 276 last week, and 290 for the corresponding week last year.

SILVER PURCHASES.

Washington, Feb. 20.—The treasury department to-day purchased 455,000 ounces of silver as follows:

50,000 at 9075; 280,000 at .9080, and 125,000 at .9085 cents per ounce. The offers were 690,000 ounces. The total silver purchases for the month including to-day aggregate 3,535,000 ounces.

EZRA TAYLOR TO RETIRE.

He Will Not Be a Candidate for Congress Again.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Hon. Ezra B. Taylor, of Warren, made the official announcement to-day that he would not again be a candidate for congress. He was elected in 1880 to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of Gen. Garfield to the presidency. Subsequently he was elected to the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first and Fifty-second congresses, being nominated by the republicans in his district without opposition. He has had, therefore, a long career in the house, and a most honorable one. Everybody knows this to be true who knows the history of congress since Judge Taylor became a member of it. There is no trickery or demagogy in all his record and he has never made a speech in the house for effect, either in Washington, or his district in Ohio. He is a singularly honest man and moreover a sensible man. As a member of the judiciary committee he has shown himself to be an able lawyer of wide learning and great wisdom.

When asked to-day why he had decided to retire from public life, he said: "When my present term expires I will be 70 years of age. My health has never been good, as I am asthmatic. I am tired out and want a home. I shall return to Warren and practice law as long as I do anything. My son-in-law, Mr. Upton, is my law partner. Mrs. Upton feels as if she must be with me when I am here, and that is not fair to her husband. For the last five or six years I have thought seriously of retiring, and now I propose to do so. I am sorry to leave congress for one reason, and one reason only, and that is because of my old and very loyal friends at home. But I am too old and too sick to continue longer, and, as I said, I want a home."

Judge Robinson, of Ravenna, will be a candidate for Judge Taylor's seat, and if Mahoning county is added to the district, Judge King and J. G. Biddler, jr., of Youngstown, will also enter the contest.

BALFOUR'S IRISH BILL

Denounced by Both English and Irish.

It May be the Rock Upon Which the Present Government Will Fall In a Few Months.

London, Feb. 20.—The News says: "Nothing more extraordinary than the Irish bill was ever submitted to parliament. Mr. Balfour's strongest opponents never imagined that he could have devised a so thoroughly bad and hopeless measure."

The Chronicle describes the bill as an "honest attempt, but as failing to please anybody. It continues: "The fact that Mr. Balfour's whole speech was a dispirited apology to his supporters instead of a strong defense, suggests that the bill is like the hero of Ibsen, 'Senguangere,' 'worm eaten at birth.' An important point is that Mr. Redmond and Mr. McCarthy positively tumbled over each other in their wild rush to be the first to oppose the bill. The principle of the judges trial of councils is a gross excrescence and must be resisted."

The Times says: "Mr. Balfour displayed a complete mastery of the details of a very complicated and technical subject. The safeguards proposed would probably never interfere with the free action of the councils. The trial clause is really nothing particularly new. A similar check is already in existence in the Irish poor law. The factitious rage into which the Gladstonians and the Irish members worked themselves is really amusing. We doubt whether they will be able to stir up the English or Scotch electors by the 'wrongs' of judicially deposed county councillors."

The Standard in its leader indicates that the government is willing to go before the country on the cry of liberal obstruction to a laudable attempt to place local government for Ireland on a popular basis.

The Telegraph says it confesses with regret that those who would fain have supported the bill found nothing to say in its defense."

Dublin, Feb. 20.—The National Press in an editorial on the new Irish local government bill, says: "The bill is a beggarly account of meaningless provisions. It is like a Japanese toy—a succession of empty boxes within one another."

The Freeman's Journal (home rule) declares that the bill is a legislative joke.

The Irish Daily Independent (Parnellite) says that the Irish party was prepared to give the bill hearty support had it proved satisfactory, but the measure is a sham, a fraud and an insult. Not much was to be expected from a unionist ministry, but nothing so ridiculous as this bill was expected.

London, Feb. 20.—The Post in an article expressing mild approval of the Irish local government bill, says that the measure is pre-eminently one to be judged in accordance with the views of its originators.

In another column the Post says: "The reception accorded the bill in the house of commons makes it highly probable that the government will modify the safeguarding clauses before it is offered for a second reading. The strongest objections are offered to the trial council's culminative vote, the disfranchisement of illiterates and the control of capital expenditure."

FOUND A LIVE BOMB.

Messina, Sicily, Feb. 20.—A loaded bomb was discovered last night outside the Spanish consulate in this city. The fuse attached to it was burning, but was quickly extinguished with remarkable presence of mind by the finders.

The police were alarmed and immediately began a search for the dynamiters, but no arrests have as yet been made. The men are supposed to be members of an anarchist society acting in sympathy with the anarchists in Spain.

SUFFERING FOR FOOD.

Durango, Mex., Feb. 20.—There is no decrease in the suffering among the poor people of this city. The drouth has been partially broken, but the supply of food has become so low that hundreds of families are actually starving.

BURNED HIS OWN CHILDREN

In Order to Save the Funeral Expenses.

A Terrible Story Comes From Canada Which Chills the Blood of People of All Classes.

Montreal, Quebec, Feb. 20.—A horrible story of a private crematory comes to light in St. Cunegonde, a suburb of this place.

A spikemaker named Adolph Lawz, recently lost three children and burned their bodies in a cooking stove to save funeral expenses.

Rev. Father S. E. Quinn was notified and he called on the father. Lawz said he had lived both in France and cities of the United States.

In both places he had heard dead people were burned in big ovens. Such being the case, he thought he was justified in burning his own young child after its death in his own cooking stove.

He also held the opinion that he had a perfect right to bury his children in his back yard or in his cellar, which he also appears to have done. He contended that he had known such things to have been done by people whom he was personally acquainted with in Paris.

TO BE SETTLED IN COURT.

Paris, Feb. 20.—M. Laur, the Boulangist deputy, who was twice struck in the face by Minister Constans, in the chamber on January 19, has had served upon the latter a summons to answer to a charge of assault and battery.

CHAS. VAUBURG ON TRIAL

Another Strangler Before the Criminal Court,

Charged with Murdering a Fellow Workman.

The Shutting Off of a Person's Breath Seems to be the Popular Way of Killing Adopted in France.

Paris, Feb. 20.—The trial of Charles Vauburg, commenced before the Seine assizes to-day. The story told by the prosecuting attorney to-day was that on Nov. 4 last, a horrible discovery was made in a cellar situated beneath a building at No. 27 Rue de Charonne, this city, a large five-story house occupied by a number of workmen's families.

Two workmen, at about noon, went down into the cellar to get a packing case and one of them went by himself into a further cellar to look for the necessary box. There he found the body of a man, completely naked, with the head cut off at the shoulders.

Dr. Descants, a police surgeon, after examining the corpse, declared the crime must have been committed in the night of Monday or Tuesday, the second or third of November, for there were already signs of putrefaction.

He further concluded that the man had been strangled before his head had been cut off, and a short cord was found in an outer cellar, where it is evident the deed was done. The decapitation, he added, appeared to have been done by very skillful hands.

On Nov. 5, M. Athalin, the well-known examining magistrate, and M. Goron, the chief of the detective service, were enabled to obtain an important statement which led to the arrest of a porter, Charles Vauburg, the prisoner, who, it is claimed, had already been implicated at Besancon in a case of manslaughter.

Vauburg, the prosecuting attorney added, lodged in the house where the headless body was found, and it would be proved that on the fatal Friday night he returned home in company with a man who was never seen to leave the house.

Vauburg said the man's name was Boutry, and that he was a porter, like himself.

Vauburg was then officially placed under arrest; he had to all intents and purposes been in the hands of justice from the moment suspicion fell on him and he was brought before the magistrate for examination. He was then informed that the headless body had been proved to be that of his friend Boutry, also known as Boutrolle, and Vauburg was advised to confess that he had murdered the man.

Vauburg claimed that the police were imbecilles and that Boutry had gone to join his regiment. But a hat known to have belonged to Boutry was found in Vauburg's room. The latter said that Boutry had given it to him.

But later, when pressed hard in private by the magistrate, Vauburg broke down and admitted that he had killed Boutry. He brought Boutry home with him to sleep, and soon after they got in bed together they had a quarrel. Vauburg became so enraged with his companion that he slezed him by the throat and when he released his hold Boutry was dead. He had strangled his friend unintentionally. Afterward he concealed the body in the cellar.

He cut the head off and threw it down a sewer to prevent the body from being identified.

GAME TO THE LAST.

London, Feb. 20.—M. Drumont, author of the "Secret De Fourmies," a socialistic study, who has already received three challenges from persons aggrieved by his attacks on the Jews in that work, and has accepted them all, fought the first one this morning with M. Isaac, on the Isle De La Jatta in the Seine. M. Drumont received two wounds, one in the abdomen, which may prove serious and prevent him from fighting the other duels which he contemplates.

GONE TO THEIR HOMES.

The Legislature Not in Session To-Day.

Wanser Introduces a Bill to Repeal the Garber Fee Bill—Canal Abandonment Bill—New Corporations.

Columbus, Feb. 20.—(Special)—The legislators have departed for their homes and quiet again reigns in this peaceful city.

Another fee bill was introduced yesterday. It is by Mr. Wanser, of Logan, and repeals the Garber bill, against which county officers have been kicking very vigorously.

Representative Farrell has introduced a bill for the abandonment of the Hocking canal.

The following articles of incorporation have been filed in the office of the secretary of state: The Occidental Gymnasium association, Cincinnati; The Chillicothe Driving Park company, Chillicothe, capital stock $35,000; The Springfield Township Mutual Fire Insurance association, New Springfield, Mahoning county; The Elgin Creamery company, Lafayette, capital stock $5,000; The Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, Twinsburg; The Central Ohio Butter and Cheese company, Centreburg, Knox county, capital stock $6,000.

Governor McKinley left to-day for his home at Canton, O., thence to go Sunday evening to Detroit, where he will attend the annual banquet of the Michigan club Monday evening, accompanied by Auditor of State Poe, Attorney-General Richards and Secretary of State Ryan.

The three joint resolutions offered by Messrs. Flickinger, Griffin and Dodge yesterday, relative to convict labor were referred to the committee on labor. During Mr. Griffin's absence his resolution was sidetracked by reference to the committee on prisons and prison reforms. When he learned of it he moved to have its reference changed to the labor committee, and he succeeded in having the reference made.

SENATOR QUAY ILL.

Philadelphia, Feb. 20.—Letters from St. Luce, Florida, report that Senator Quay who is staying there, is threatened with pneumonia. His health had not been improved by the change of climate. Mrs. Quay is on her way south from Washington.

A QUARANTINE IN OHIO.

Diphtheria is Raging in a Southern Town.

Macksburg Shut Out From the Rest of the World Until Doctors Can Get Control of the Disease.

Marietta, O., Feb. 20.—Macksburg, a town of 500 inhabitants, 18 miles north of this city, was quarantined last evening by the local authorities.

An epidemic of diphtheria is prevailing there, and the public schools are closed.

No public meetings of any kind are allowed, and no children are permitted on the streets.

Trains only stop to take or leave mail. Quite a number of deaths are reported, but particulars cannot be had on account of the quarantine.

TROUBLE IN THE MINES.

Dynamite Being Used by the Workmen Against the Soldiers.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Feb. 20.—Trouble is still brewing at Coal Creek. On Monday night dynamite bombs were hurled at the pickets, but no damage was done.

The attacking party was repulsed without much trouble by a squad in advance of the regular line.

It is said that it was intended to make an attack with a bigger force, but that has now probably been abandoned.

OUT FOR HILL.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 20.—The Augusta Chronicle announces that it is for David B. Hill for the presidency.

The announcement was hailed with a shout of approval by the Hill men here, and was a great surprise to the lukewarm supporters of Mr. Cleveland, who had been counting on the Chronicle as the champion of the "lost cause."

READY FOR THE BATTLE.

Albany Rapidly Filling Up with Delegates

To the Democratic State Convention on Monday.

The Protesters Will be Heard by a Committee, and Will Not be Permitted to Address the Convention.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 20.—The hotels are filling up with almost appalling rapidity when it is considered that neither the Tammany or Buffalo delegations, about 2,000 all told, are not here yet. Dining rooms and parlors are being converted into sleeping rooms and the larger corridors of the big hotels will be lined with cots.

A majority of the democratic assemblymen and senators remained in the city after adjournment of the legislature yesterday, and delegates from the smaller towns are already here.

Senator Hill, Richard Croker and Edward Murphy were together for a short time this morning and Lieut.-Gov. Sheehan joined the group later on.

Mr. Murphy has headquarters here but will go back to Troy each night, taking Mr. Croker with him.

The decorations of the hall were completed this morning, and are very effective. The boxes are draped in bunting and flags, and over the proscenium arch is suspended a large portrait of George Washington. The stage is set in a landscape, and the orchestra space is divided off for the accommodation of reporters.

The convention will be called to order promptly at 12 o'clock on Monday by Chairman Murphy, who will probably name Bourke Cockran as chairman, although that will be decided Monday morning at the meeting of the state committee.

The committee will meet about 10 o'clock and it is said they will settle all controversies and listen to all protests before the convention meets at noon.

The protesting committees from New York and Brooklyn in regard to the alleged too early convention will be compelled to state their grievances before the state committee and will get their answer there and not at the convention.

The New York dissentents committee of fifty arrived to-day and their case will be presented by Frederick R. Coudert, Wm. Grace and Charles S. Fairchild.

The printed protests are already in the hands of the state committee.

The Brooklyn delegation to appear before the committee for the same purpose consists of A. A. Healey, F. W. Heinrich and E. M. Shepard. Both delegations will be quartered at the Kenmore and notice is already waiting for them that they will be heard early Monday morning.

The committee expected to present their case at the open convention, and it is said yet that if they can obtain cards of admission they will do so and raise their voices in the convention.

A delegation of a similar nature will come down from Rochester, and there is liable to be some active protesting if these all gain admission to the hall.

The Tammany hall delegation of about 1,000 is expected to arrive to-night, and they are to be divided up among the four big hotels. It is difficult to see where the delegations from other cities will stay after they get here.

FRANCE IS STILL TALKING

About the Fatal Shooting of M. Abeille.

Public Sympathy is All with Banker Deacon.

He Will Soon be Tried, and the General Impression is That He Will be Acquitted of the Charge of Murder.

Paris, Feb. 20.—Interest in the Deacon-Abeille tragedy has in no way diminished, and is not likely to do so until Mr. Edward Parker Deacon is tried and acquitted—for that seems to be the ending of affairs looked forward to on all sides.

When the trial takes place it is likely that some additional sensational revelations may be made.

It was reported, soon after the shooting, that there was another woman in the case, and that this woman is supposed by an anonymous letter to have notified Mr. Deacon of his wife's infidelity.

This seems to be correct in every particular. The second woman in the case is said to be a countess, moving in high circles in this city, and who was deeply enamored of M. Emile Abeille, the man shot by Mr. Deacon on Wednesday night. M. Abeille, it appears, neglected the countess, and followed Mrs. Deacon about, thus arousing the jealousy of his former lover, who caused him to be watched, with the result that she was able to notify Mr. Deacon of his wife's infidelity and to enable him to surprise her almost in the arms of her lover.

It was also stated that Mr. Deacon, soon after the shooting, sent several telegrams to this city. This statement has since been entirely confirmed; it will be found that two cable messages have been sent to the United States by Mr. Deacon, one to Boston, your correspondent is informed, and the other to New York.

One of the telegrams sent to this city was addressed to a member of the firm of L'Herbette, Kane & Co., bankers of the Rue Scribe, with whom Mr. Deacon is said to be in partnership, a statement, however, which has been denied. This telegram reads as follows:

"Last night I fired three revolver shots at Emile Abeille, whom I found in my wife's apartments. One ball wounded him in the thigh, the other in the chest; the third missed. I have been informed that he died this morning. I have received tokens of sympathy from everybody. The magistrates have been kindly disposed towards me. The reasons which influenced me, will, it would seem, exonerate me."

During the day Mrs. Deacon left the hotel with her children and is at the Metropole. She refuses to see any one.

The autopsy upon the body of the late M. Abeille took place yesterday evening and it was the occasion of a most distressing scene. The relatives of the dead man (two brothers and a sister, Countess De La Redoute), protested strongly against the body being mutilated by the surgeons.

They claimed that there could be no possible doubt that M. Abeille died from pistol shot wounds inflicted by Mr. Edward Parker Deacon, and that it was outrageous to disfigure the remains without any necessity.

The Countess De La Redoute is said to have begged the officials of Cannes on her knees not to allow the body to be mutilated.

The officials, however, insisted that the law compelled them to proceed with the autopsy, and so the body was handed over to the surgeons, who, in due course of time, decided officially that death had been caused by a pistol wound in the breast.

Mrs. Deacon and her four children, to the surprise of everybody, the Cannes authorities as well, have mysteriously and completely disappeared. They vanished from the Hotel Metropole during the past night and, according to one rumor, are making for England, from which country they will, according to the story, take a steamer for the United States, entering upon the books under some assumed name.

SHE WAS THE COAST BEAUTY

Mrs. Deacon Well Known in San Francisco.

The Daughter of Admir l Baldwin, She Was the Pet of the Upper Ten for Years.

San Francisco, Feb. 20.—Mrs. Deacon, whose intrigue with M. Abeille caused the shooting at Cannes, was very well known here, where Admiral Baldwin was stationed from 1864 to 1873.

Myra Baldwin was a beautiful girl, who entered society very early, as is the custom here, where a girl makes her debut frequently at 15 and is as mature phisically and mentally as a girl in a colder climate at 18.

She had many admirers and was the pet of the fashionable set, being the especial favorite of Mrs. George Hearst and Mrs. John T. Doyle.

She attended all the large parties, and for two seasons that she was conspicuous here she was the reigning beauty. The story of the shooting caused a great sensation here among society people.

THEY BURNED HIM ALIVE.

Two Negroes Arrested for a Terrible Crime.

They Poured Rosin Over a Sleeping Man and Then Applied a Torch to His Clothes.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 20.—The mystery which surrounded the horrible death of Miles Toomer, a young negro, at Hillsboro, last Monday night, has been solved.

On Monday night last Toomer was found in the streets with his clothing all ablaze. The fire was extinguished but Toomer was so badly burned that he soon afterward died.

After the fire was extinguished it was found that some grass near by was also on fire and that some one had been lying in the center of the burned spot.

From this clue detectives have worked, and yesterday they announced that Lewis Ruffin and Alice Cotton, both colored, had poured rosin over him and then set him on fire. The guilty persons have been jailed. There is great indignation over the crime.

HE IS SPREADING OUT.

Flickinger Gets Into More Trouble at Columbus

Trying to Defeat a Defiance County Measure.

The Lucas County Statesman Has Taken the Case of His Neighbors Under His Protecting Wing.

Columbus, Feb. 20.—(Special)—It was learned from conversation this morning that Defiance had two representatives in the legislature, while the certificate was given to only one—Hon. John W. Winn, of Defiance. This question was brought up through the discussion of members about local measures and how officious some persons were in attending to other folks' business, and while discussing the matter one member said, "Why, Defiance has a divided delegation, non-partisan as it were, in the persoin of Winn and Flickinger." This remark was caused caused over a local bill introduced by Representative Winn on January 12, authorizing the city of Defiance to build, furnish and manage a memorial hall building, to purchase the necessary material and real estate upon which to build the same. It was read the second time on the 13th and referred to the committee on municipal corporations and by that committee reported back and its passage recommended on the 11th of this month. When it came up for passage Mr. Winn had it referred to himself as a select committee of one with privilege to report at any time. Its author had this disposition made of this measure so that the people of that city could have a chance to more fully examine the expenditure of so much money—$40,000. A few days ago, when Flickinger of Lucas had awakened from his Rip Van Winkle sleep, he sauntered over to the desk of Mr. Winn and asked him when he was going to push that bill to a passage. To this query Winn replied, "I am in no hurry, as I want my people to know what they are doing." "That is just what I am here for," replied the white-haired statesman from Lucas. "I used to live in Defiance and the republicans wanted me to watch this bill and defeat it, and that is what I came here to tell you, as I did not want to take any snap-judgment on you, and I do not want you to take any advantage of my (Flickinger's) absence from the house." In a laughing way Winn replied, "Well, Mr. Flickinger, if you are representing the people of Defiance you must stay in the house and watch their interests as I will report the bill back when I have received the assurance that the bill meets with the approval of the taxpayers of Defiance."

Flickinger then said in an imploring way: "Can't you give me two days notice of your intention to put it on passage, as I want to say something on the bill in behalf of the republicans of that city and county." Mr. Winn replied: "Stay in the house and keep your eye on me for I am liable to at any time let the measure come before the members and if I cannot hold up my end of the debate with you, then the bill may be defeated, in fact it is my opinion that I know better what the citizens up there want, than you do who lives up on the banks of the Maumee." With this bill to watch on his hands and his convict labor resolution and bill, our white-haired friend will for the next two weeks have all he wants to do, as Griffin is after him on one side and Winn on the other. With these two fellows he will have very little show and the chances are ten to one that he will resign as member from Defiance.

The bill provides that when 50 resident taxpayers of Defiance petition the city council to submit to a vote of the electors a proposition to build a memorial hall building, provided that more than 40 days shall elapse between the presenting of such a petition and the first municipal election, then the council may submit it to a special election, after having published the same in a daily paper, if one is published, if not, then in two weekly papers of opposite politics.

If the election results in favor of the proposition, the council shall appoint a board of trustees consisting of five members to be known as memorial hall trustees., of which not more than three shall belong to the same political party, and their terms of office will be one, two, three, four and five years.

If any should die or resign his successor shall be appointed from the same political party. The trustees will have entire control of the management and supervision of the erection and furnishing of such a building.

One of their number shall be president and another secretary.

The last named shall keep an accurate account of all moneys expended and send to the council annually an itemized statement of all receipts and expenditures.

For the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting thereon this kind of a building the council shall issue not to exceed $40,000 in bonds. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $500 and payable in 20 years, with interest not to exceed 5 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually at such place as council may direct. In the construction of the building the bill provides that one entire floor shall be used as a hall, with ante-rooms, cloak and reception rooms attached, the remainder of the building to be erected as the trustees may see fit. This hall is to be rent free to any G. A. R. organization at any time unless previously engaged. All moneys collected for rent is to be turned into the city treasury and placed to the credit of the fund to be known as the memorial hall fund. The money to pay off the bonds is to be raised by a tax on the property of the city of Defiance.

A NICE THING FOR TOM.

Locomotive Engineer Falls Into a Fortune.

A Detroit Man Dies Worth Sixty Thousand Dollars Who Did Not Know Where His Brother Lived.

Wichita, Kas., Feb. 20.—Tom Costello, an Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe locomotive engineer, was notified yesterday that he was heir to $60,000, left by his brother Patrick, who recently died in Detroit, Mich.

The brothers were born in Ireland and had not met for forty years. Patrick went to Australia when a youth, amassed a fortune in the mines, moved to America, and that was the last his family knew of him.

He was a sort of recluse, and no one in Detroit knew anything of his affairs or of any of his relatives. Curiously enough, however, the probate judge into whose hands the property fell for administration had met Tom Costello, of this place, in Colorado last year, and, surmising that there might possibly be some connection, wrote him on the subject. All the necessary proofs of relationship were soon furnished and Tom Costello gets $20,000 in cash and some fine business property in Detroit.

A new man can be made, out of one that's "used-up," bilious and dyspeptic. It's done by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It starts the torpid liver into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, cleanses, repairs, and strengthens the system, and restores health and vigor. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, and builds up flesh and strength. It's the only Blood and Liver Remedy that's guaranteed, in every case, to benefit or cure. If it doesn't do all that's claimed for it, the money is promptly refunded. But it keeps its promises—that's the reason it can be sold in this way.

You only pay for the good you get.

"Discovery" strengthens Weak Lungs, and cures Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections. Don't be fooled into taking something else, said to be "just as good," that the dealer may make a larger profit. There's nothing at all like the "Discovery."

The latter gentleman had a dream last night in which he saw the quartet above mentioned, hanging on a string with a lot of fish in the shed at the rear of his house. Mr. Gunckel says that the dream forbodes trouble for anybody who monkers with him. He says that he won't mention any names, but he will say that a certain quartet don't want to fool with the buzz-saw. THE WORD CONTEST.

An Official Statement from the Ladies' Committee.

The following statement with relation to the word contest for the Protestant hospital gives particulars not fully covered in the article appearing in last night's Bee. It is to be regretted that the contest did not result more successfully in a financial way:

"The prize offered by the word contest committee has been awarded to Miss Anna J. Morse, one of the teachers in the Warren school, whose list contained 1,457 correct words. While the ladies of the hospital did not realize as much from the enterprise as they had hoped, yet it was fairly successful. Three hundred and seventy-one lists of words were submitted, of which only 110 came from Toledo. The balance came from 20 different states.

"Aside from that $115 was donated by friends who desired to help the good cause, but who did not care to make a list of words.

"This makes the total receipts $300, from which the prize of $100 will be paid beside the expenses, which will be about $30, leaving a net profit of $170."

NOT VERY CHEAP GAS.

A Man Fined for Stealing It—Superintendent Daily Talks.

The Northwestern Natural Gas company, by its agent, Superintendent Daily, yesterday caused the arrest of one of their consumers, on the charge of stealing gas. The man was arraigned in probate court yesterday afternoon, and pleaded guilty and was fined $25, which he paid.

The case is a peculiar one. The consumer cut in on the street side of the meter, and in consequence received gas before it reached the meter. The company caught him at it and his arrest was the result. He heard of the warrant, and voluntarily appeared in court and pleaded guilty. He said he was out of work and expected to be delinquent on his gas bill, and took this step to avoid losing his gas for a month, when he intended to settle up.

In conversation with a Bee Mr. Daily said: "It was a very unpleasant duty for me to perform, but it was absolutely necessary to protect our interests. We didn't cause this arrest to inflict punishment on this one man, but to set an example to others, who have adopted this and other plans to defraud us out of fuel. There are over a dozen who are beating us, and if they don't cease now, more prosecutions will follow, and we will show no compassion. This man has a good wife and a nice family, and out of feeling for them I would ask that his name be suppressed. It is a case where innocent ones will suffer for what they could not help."

W. & L. E. AND B. & O.

The Toledo Officials Meet at Wheeling

With the B. & O. People to Arrange for the Transfer of Baggage and Passengers Between the Two Roads.

General Manager A. G. Blair, General Passenger Agent J. M. Hall, Traveling Passenger Agent P. J. Hines and Auditor D. Adams, of the Wheeling & Lake Erie railroad, are at Wheeling, W. Va., where they have been meeting with B. & O. officials to complete arrangements for the transfer of passengers and baggage between the two roads.

General Passenger Agent Hall, speaking to a Wheeling Register reporter, said: "The W. & L. E. is now almost an air line between Toledo and Wheeling. Of course," continued Mr. Hall, "our entree into Wheeling over the Terminal road was originally intended as an experiment, but from the success that has already attended the venture, it is safe to say that the arrangement will be permanent. The venture was started in a very dull time, and for the first week or two business was naturally light, people hardly having become accustomed to the new institution, but now the increase in business daily, both in freight and passenger traffic is very noticeable. We claim that the Wheeling & Lake Erie has now better facilities than any road now entering Wheeling. With three trains between Wheeling and Steubenville every day, together with trains through to Toledo, as well as the trains arriving from the west over the main line, renders the service even now of considerable value and importance to Wheeling."

The Toledo gentlemen will return home to-night.

Pension Agent M. Loenshal yesterday received a letter from J. T. Swarngain, of Walsten, Ala., asking if he would do a little work for a good democrat as well as for republicans towards securing a pension. Mr. Loenshal dropped a return note stating that he was ready to do business for democrats, republicans, prohibitionists or mugwumps, but inasmuch as Mr. Swarngain was in a regiment which fought on the wrong side during the rebellion, it was plain he could not be of any use to the Alabamian in securing a pension.

BABY STATISTICS.

Some Very Useful Information About the Wee Mites.

A baby is born at every beat of the human heart. That is more than one for every tick of the clock. These "living jewels" (as the poet calls babies) "dropped anstalled from heaven," take wings and fly back whence they came one every minute of the day. From January 1 to December 31 between 31,000,000 and 40,000,000 living jewels are dropped into this cold world. There are more baby girls than boy babies. The proportion of female births to male births is as 100 to 90. So that between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 more girls are born in the world each year than boys. There is always a surplus of women, and the extra number of girl babies keep up the supply.

The rate of infant mortality is enormous. In round numbers, 5,000,000 babies never live long enough to talk; 5,000,000 more never have a chance to walk or run, and 5,000,000 more never get old enough to go to school. If you are good at figures get out your paper and pencil and try this sum.

Here is a simple problem in arithmetic: A baby is born to-day (1892). Now, suppose its ancestors had married at the age of 21, from the time of our Lord—56 generations—how many grandfathers has that baby had? The answer, in round numbers, will be three figures followed by 15 ciphers. Prof. Proctor one time figured that if from a single pair each husband and wife had married at the age of 21 for 5,000 years, the population of the earth, if there had been no deaths, would now be 2,199,915 followed by 144 ciphers.

Again, if we go back to the time of Christ, or 56 generations, how many births do you think must have taken place in order to bring you, who read these lines, into the world? If you try to get the exact figures they will bother you. But to change the problem. Say that all the babies born in one year are one foot in length. Now, if laid head to feet they would stretch out from New York to Hong Kong and some to spare. If the 40,000,000 babies could walk past the office of the Baby at the rate of 20 per minute, or 1,200 per hour, during the entire year, by the time the last child passed 312 numbers of this paper would be published, and might be read by 6-year-old boys and girls who were just born when the procession started. Suppose that each baby born this year weighed eight pounds; look at the combined weight! It would take half a dozen cradles of the size, capacity and strength of our new steel war cruisers to hold the infants. When twins arrived in Artemus Ward's family some one called it an episode. "Yes," said Artemus, "two episodes, weighing about 18 pounds jintly." In the foregoing baby figures we have allowed for episodes.—Baby.

AMERICAN EMBASSADRESSES.

Inasmuch as this column is supposed to be devoted, among other things, to the foibles of those who are known in Europe by the name of the upper ten thousand, I suppose that I may consider myself justified in making a passing reference to the very pronounced foible—it would be obviously wrong to describe it as a folly—of European diplomats for American wives, writes the Marquise de Fontenoy, in the New York Recorder.

I am reminded of this by the impending marriage of the young Countess Baunedes, daughter of the Spanish ambassador at Berlin, to Queen Isabella's grand nephew, the Marquis Alcedo, son of the Marquis San Carlos and grandson of Princess Josepha Bourbon.

The mother of the bride, who is the most popular ambassadress that has ever helped to represent Spain at Berlin, was formerly a Miss Thorndyke, of Boston, and her sister is the wife of the Count de Sartiges, who for so many years figured as French ambassador to the Holy See.

At Madrid, the wife of the German ambassador, Baron von Stumm, is an American, and has recently been distinguished by the queen regent, with the star, badge and ribbon of the Ladies' Order of Louise.

At St. Petersburg the wives of the German ambassador, of the Wurtemberg minister plenipotentiary and of the British charge d'affairs are all three American girls.

So, too, is the better, though smaller half of Sir Francis Plunkett, the British minister at the Hague. At Constantinople the wife of the Italian ambassador, Baron Blanc, who has just presented his letters of recall to the sultan, is a native of the United States, and the same may be said of the Countess John Bernstorff, whose husband is attached to the German embassy accredited to the sublime Porte.

At Rome, the wives of both the Dutch and the Danish ministers are Americans, while at Paris there are the Countess Moltke, the ambassadress of Denmark, and also the partly divorced spouse of the dutch envoy, M. De Stuers, who both hail from this country.

It will be seen, therefore, that the American girl is fairly well represented in the diplomatic corps of the old world.

THE CARD WRITER.

A Relic of a Decade Ago Moderately Alive at Present.

Card writing is a lost art. The old "star penman" are either passed away or have gone into some other business. Five to ten years ago there existed everywhere in this country a big army of penmen, and because of the novelty of their art in its modern forms people patronized them largely.

But gradually the eagle and stag makers, with their penmen's papers by the dozen, drifted out of sight. To-day they exist merely as an incident, not a rule, of the business college procession.

One of the "legitimates" of this city, who has entirely outlived the poesy and dreams of his vocation, had several things to say yesterday about the peculiarities of the "card writing" patron.

"Of course, written cards never were the correct thing in really polite society. No one except New Year's callers care for written cards now, and most of these are boys and not very mature men."

"Ladies, then, never have their cards written?"

"Not frequently. And when we do get an order from the fair sex it is very difficult to please."

"Men, then, are not so discriminating?"

"Few of them are. Boys from 15 to 20 want their calling cards written in a large, tangled, shaded style, full of a dazzling and elaborate effect—the initials 'combined' in some wonderful manner. They think it indicates dignity and mystery.

"The business doesn't pay in these days. I earned for about four days' work last week something like $50 net. Ten years ago I could as easily earn several hundreds of dollars in the same time."—New York World.

CALIFORNIA CHRISTMAS IN '49.

"Do I remember my first Christmas in California?" said James M. White, the capitalist, to a San Francisco Chronicle reporter. "Well, rather, young man. My first Christmas in California was the Christmas of 1849, and at that time I was the proprietor of the Aquila del Oro or Golden Eagle gambling house. Of course, I am not fond of talking about those days, but, after all, we were all pretty much alike, and every one of us was after the almighty dollar. Well, never mind how I came to open the Golden Eagle, but open it I did, and I was making more than $1,000 a day clear money when Christmas of 1849 came. San Francisco then was a little cluster of houses around a plaza, and my place was on the plaza, as were all the other saloons and gambling houses. I remember it was a rainy winter and the miners came down to the bay early. Of course, we were all doing a smashing business, and when Christmas day came around I determined to give all the boys a feed. Mexican monte and roulette were the games played in those days, and the stakes were in Spanish doubloons, French five-franc pieces, Mexican dollars and gold dust—more of it in the latter than anything else.

"Well, we had a red hot day at the tables, and when dinner time came the room was full and every table busy, dust and doubloons being piled a foot high before the players. I called on the only restaurant man in the place and told him I wanted a Christmas dinner for 15 people, I to furnish the wines and liquors. He agreed to give me a set-out for $500, and I said 'go ahead.' Eggs at that time were $1 apiece, flour $1 a pound, onions $2 a pound, potatoes $1.50 a pound and other things in proportion.

"Along about 6 o'clock Christmas night I called a halt in the games, announcing that as soon as the deal was over the boys were going to a Christmas dinner, and advising the players to close up their bets.

"It did not take long for the boys to close the games, and then we went and dined. I tell you it was a Christmas dinner and no mistake. We had wine enough to float a ship and all the good things to eat that money could buy. After dinner the boys went back to work and that night the house was a clear $5,000 winner. We had music and all the rest of it after the game closed, and wound up Christmas night with a grand hurrah.

"This Christmas? Well—now—I am going to spend this Christmas like I have spent all of them for the last 20 years. I am going home to the dear folks like a good fellow and dine on turkey and the rest of it.

"Something of a contrast, eh, between the Christmas of '49 and '91? Well, I should say so. I can shut my eyes and see the long, low room, the score of tables, the heaps of dust, doubloons and dollars, the eager, anxious faces of the players and hear again the hum and buzz of the Aquila del Oro. To-morrow I will see pictures of the old days in the Christmas fire and thank God for peace, plenty and happiness in my old age. Ah, my boy, Christmas of '49 was a great Christmas, but you don't know how much better, old as I am, the Christmas of '91 is."

HER MOST INTERESTING AGE.

Some Say 20, Some 30, Some 40, and Others 55.

This question was recently discussed by an artist, an author and a woman of society. The artist said he did not like to paint the portraits of those between the age of 25 and 40 years. Before 25 the face has an expectancy which charms. It is looking forward with joyous freshness and hope, and it is full of puzzling promises. At 40 years the character is formed, and the lines of the countenance are stronger in the painter's study, but in intervening years the face has lost its expectancy, is apt to be indifferent and has no particular interest.

The author differed; he liked to study women between the ages of 30 and 40. They had then the experience of the world and the joyousness of youth. In those years they were the brightest and most interesting. The society woman thought it was impossible to give general answers to the question, as individual women differ in regard to the most attractive age. Some are most charming at 40 years, while others have passed their prime at 25. At 30 or upward the best nature of a woman will show to every advantage; but probably the balance of opinion turns in favor of from 18 to 25.

Taking everything into consideration, the best answer would be that women are always interesting to the friends who love them.—Young Ladies' Bazar.

CURRENT TOPICS.

The efforts of inventors are being continually directed toward methods of preventing accidents, and the most recent of devices for this purpose is one patented by a New York man, the object being to display a signal and sound an alarm in the cab whenever the engine passes a signal set to danger. The apparatus requires no electrical connection between the engine and the track, in that respect being comparatively unique. Connected with the regular switches and signals is a small wheel which rests just inside of the rail. When the signal is at danger, this wheel comes in contact with a mechanism connected with the cab of the engine, and a rod operating in a cylinder is pushed upward by running over the wheel. An electric circuit is thus completed by means of this moving piston, a bell is rung and a visible signal appears in the cab before the eyes of the engineer. By a special device, the bell can be made to ring for some time so that the engineer has ample warning of the danger ahead.

A recent census bulletin throws some light upon the extent and the importance of the irrigation of the arid lands of the west. The territory thus supplied with water exceeds one million acres. Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico contain the largest part of this acreage. In Montana there are 5,664 farms, and of these 3,700 are irrigated for crops. But in addition to 350,000 acres on which crops were thus raised by irrigation, 217,000 other acres were irrigated for grazing purposes. The average first cost of water right was $4.63 an acre, and of preparing the soil for cultivation, including its purchase price, was $9.54 an acre. The average present value of the irrigated land in the state, including buildings, is placed at $49.50. Water is apparently a good investment in Montana.

There are among Spanish merchants some who get but $8.50 weekly in return for years of expensive education. From $700 to $1,000 will be found to be the average moderate remuneration for the ordinary Spanish engineer. Of course, there are engineers, again, whose annual totals go beyond $2,000. Working sixty hours per week, they will receive but $5 to $7. Only the extra good hands get the larger amount. As living is not cheap in the towns (about the same as in Paris or other big French villes), they are obliged to either go a rather long way to their suburban homes, or, if living in the city, to live poor and have less food and less pure air. Puddlers only earn three and one-half to four pesetas daily. All salaries are usually paid fortnightly.

The famine in Russia is affecting manufacturing industries of that empire most seriously, says the Commercial Bulletin, and none with greater severity than the cotton trade. At Moscow, the center of Russia cotton industry, a severe commercial crisis has arisen and numerous failures for large amounts have taken place. Russian manufacturers have no market outside of the empire; and, as it happens, the afflicted districts are those where previously the best demand for cotton goods existed. The crisis has come upon a trade by no means well prepared to meet it, as in the annual review of Messrs. Ellison & Co., published last October, it was stated that spinners and manufacturers in Russia had an unfavorable experience, and that prices of the best production were then below cost of manufacture, while low class goods were barely remunerative. The cotton industry in Russia has grown to considerable proportions, as excluding Poland and Finland there are now 408 mills in existence, containing 3,000,215 spindles and 184,181 looms. Russia, under ordinary conditions, consumes a considerable amount of American cotton. During the cotton year 1890-91, direct shipments from United States amounted to 130,000 bales, and these were supplemented by an indirect movement via Liverpool, etc. In view of prevailing conditions, this demand is certain to be largely curtailed.

Visitors who happen to drop in on the little town of Port Castries, in the little West India island of St. Lucia, will find some mighty interesting things there. St. Lucia is a British island, and the scarlet of the British uniform and the flash of British bayonets are everywhere. It is a little bigger than Martha's Vineyard, but not one-tenth so valuable, and yet it is defended with forts, and batteries, and torpedoes, and rapid-firing guns, as if every square yard of its rocky, volcanic soil were worth a king's ransom. Barracks are building, new forts are going up everywhere about the harbor where artillery can get a foothold, new guns of the latest model and most approved destructiveness are coming out from England. What is the secret of all these mighty military preparations which are converting an insignificant little islet into a new Gibraltar? A glance at the map explains it. St. Lucia "strategically dominates," as army officers would say, the approaches to the Nicaragua canal, and forms the southern end of the long chain of fortresses which extend from Halifax nearly to the South American coast, holding a pistol to the heart of our great seaboard cities. Our English cousins somehow neglected to say much about Halifax and Bermuda and Kingston and St. Lucia and such things, in their very pacific and complimentary after-dinner speeches. Nor has Mr. Edward Atkinson discussed the subject in his eloquent eulogies of the lamb-like instincts of nations which adopt free trade.

Every year the doctors find some new way of applying nature's own remedies. In the veterinary hospital of the University of Pennsylvania water is very extensively used. By the aid of rubber tubing, cold water is kept running slowly through an open wound from two to ten hours a day, and the antiseptic dressings being put on only at night. By this treatment the wound is kept clean, inflammation and pain are allayed, and healing is consequently very rapid. The hospital has also a brick tank, with hot and cold water supply, in which a dozen horses, suffering from corns or other hoof diseases, can enjoy a sociable daily foot-bath.

DANNY'S VALENTINE.

"Danny!" said she, said she.
"Do you know that to-morrow
Oh grif! and oh sorrow!
St. Valentine's Day will be, will be,

"Danny!" said she, said she,
"Nanny!" said he, said he,
"To write there's no need,
Because I can't weed!
So let's play that the Val'entines is we, is we,
Let's play that the Val'entines is we!"

THE LYSIGHT-HIME AFFAIR

Involves the Administration in More Trouble.

Has the United States Any Rights in the State of Ohio—Collector Waldorf Makes a Statement—Opinion of a Legal Light.

Misfortunes and troubles never come singly to persons and what is true of individuals is also true of nations. Here is the Harrison administration squaring matters with her unruly little neighbor, Chile, when up springs this Lysight-Hime affair and confronts he of grandfather's hat fame.

It will not down, and the legal fraternity are scratching their noodles over the matter of jurisdiction. Talking on the matter this moring Mr. L. G. Richardson said:

"The United States can only acquire exclusive jurisdiction over territory within the boundaries of one of the states by strictly following the method set forth in Article I, Section 8, of the Federal Constitution, viz: by purchase, by consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards and other needful buildings.

Commonwealth vs. Clary, 8 Mass., 72; People vs. Godfrey, 17 Johnson, 225.

These are the leading cases and have settled the question. In the Massachusetts case, decided in 1811, it was shown that the United States had purchased the land upon which the offense was committed, by consent of the legislature of the state, and it was held that the U. S. courts had exclusive jurisdiction. In the New York case, decided in 1819, it appeared that the United States had not acquired the property by purchase, and therefore the state courts had jurisdiction of the case.

"If it shall be shown that the United States purchased the property upon which the government building in Toledo stands, by consent of the legislature of the state of Ohio, then the state courts have no jurisdiction of offenses committed on that property and the defendant Lysight in the present case must be discharged in police court."

So that if Mr. Richardson is correct the case will eventually come before Judge Ricks.

Besides the legal aspects of the case more or less bad blood has been generated by the unfortunate affair.

Collector Waldorf said to a Bee this morning that the statements made by Mr. Lysight were incorrect.

"He quotes me as advising him 'to fight it out,'" Mr. Waldorf said. "Now, there is no truth in that statement. I don't know Mr. Lysight and never talked with him on this or any other subject. I told Mr. Hime when, a few days ago, he complained of annoyance from the young man to refer him to me.

The question of jurisdiction is a nice legal point in law. If Judge Sala decides he has jurisdiction Judge Ricks may call him down—and then what?

"It is a good deal like the flea that bit the cow that kicked over the lamp that fired the shed that burned Chicago," said a lawyer this morning.

Judge Sala will undoubtedly defend his decision and the state against any encroachment on the part of Uncle Samuel.

LOOK UP YOUR COINS,

As They Are Worth Something Big,

If There is Anything Odd About Them—A Toledoan Will Get Fifty Dollars for One Which is Rather a Curiosity.

The collection of old and queer coins has arrived at such a stage that it will pay money handlers and others to get a list and post up on the many and by no means meagre premiums offered by the fiends for the gratification of their whims.

This morning a representative of Wm. A. Fletcher, a prominent coin collector, of Chicago, offered Clyde Van Vleck, the hustling young oil operator, $25 for an option on a silver dollar for which he agreed to take $50.

The coin to all appearances is not different from the ordinary dollar all are hustling for. It was coined at New Orleans and bears the date of 1889. The only particular in which it differs from other silver dollars is that the engraving is moved around just one-quarter out of the proper position. The head of Liberty and the eagle on an ordinary dollar are stamped directly opposite each other.

Mr. Van Vleck was in conversation with the agent at the Boody house this morning, and the subject of old coins and their worth came up. Mr. Van Vleck said he had a coin that was something of a curiosity, and he described it to the gentleman, who became interested at once, and was exceedingly anxious to see the piece. Mr. Van Vleck sent down to his house and got it. The agent examined the coin very closely, and in conclusion offered $25 for it. Mr. Van Vleck refused, stating that he held it at $50. The agent counted over his money, but didn't have enough to buy the coin and pay his way to Chicago, so he deposited an amount to secure the sale. He took Mr. Van Vleck's name, and will send a draft for $50 as soon as he reaches Chicago.

TOLEDO, OHIO, FEBRUARY 20, 1892

Prospective democratic candidates are on dress parade these days and the party is sizing them up for first choice in June.

The war of the rebellion closed 26 years ago and the nation is paying today an annual bill of $184,217,621 war expenses.

The Missouri legislature goes clear to the front in the gerrymander business, giving the republicans only one congressional district.

Nearly 400 lives were lost in the year 1890 by fire in the holds of steamships cargoed with cotton. This seems incredulous but is a statistical fact.

Statesman Griffin has introduced a bill to retire the democratic judges of Lucas county. They would have been retired four years ago if the Bee had not come to the rescue. The legislature now being republican of course the Griffin bill will become a law.

It is cheeringly announced that our relations with Chile are no longer strained. Influential newspapers which have stood by the president in the affair are now reminding him that it is high time to recall Minister Egan, as the government which has shown itself friendly has declared him to be not an acceptable envoy.

The president has sent a message to congress, advising that the Chickasaw and Choctaw claims, for which the last congress appropriated $2,991,450, must be reconsidered. In reviewing the work of the billion-dollar spendthrift body and also mindful of the empty treasury it is evident the Indians must be swindled some more.

As was anticipated, the failure to make any trade concessions between Canada and the United States is attributed by Canadian authorities to disinclination on the part of this country, and no real desire for a trade treaty. And we, on this side know as well, that with the conservative party of Canada, the conference just ended was only a feint, to satisfy the more liberal element.

John M. Palmer does not wait the usual two or three years before speaking in the senate. He undoubtedly thinks that at his age he ought to begin early. And so he has commenced by urging the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States senators by the people. It is a popular movement and one that will win.

Just now Quay seems to be the elephant, the hoodoo, or a mascot, according as you look at him. The president is courting his smiles, believing in his power, while the Pennsylvania republicans are reciting in columns of print how the party in that state must rid itself of the incubus, and why. In the meanwhile, the object of so much solicitude is in Florida listening to what the wild waves on the summer-land coast are saying.

Attention is called to the very sensible article on this page of the Bee from the pen of Mr. W. H. Maher, under the caption of "The Duties of a Citizen." It is timely and the suggestions the author advances should be carefully considered by every citizen of Toledo. It is time to dispassionately discuss the tax question and to talk understandingly about the present and the future. The article referred to is the first of a series of letters which Mr. Maher will contribute, all of which will be seriously in the interest of Toledo's welfare and prosperity.

RUSSIAN PRISONS AND PEASANTS.

Whoso studies Russian affairs (and who does not, these days?) must be interested in Russian prison life. George Kennan has called the attention of the civilized world to the subject, and the famine has made the affairs of Russia common talk. The government department of prisons has just issued, with other enumerations, its penitentiary report for 1889 (rather more tardy work than our own officers are capable of), but Russia has such vast expanses with wide wastes between, and the convict and exile branch of the empire is one of the chief government departments. And again, three years in stagnant Russia has not the significance of three years in progressive America.

Mr. Kennan, in his lectures and papers, defines what is meant by prisoners by "administrative process." They are taken by special officers of the crown and committed to exile without judicial hearing and without trial or any possible hope of release. They are the Nihilists—the agitators who are said to conspire against the government and its autocratic head. This class of prisoners has increased five per cent. during the year. They are scholarly people who know when they rebel against the grinding cruelty of the Czar's mandates that Siberia, with its bleak and frozen wastes, its terrible mines where men and women fare worse than beasts of burden in any other country, awaits them. The pictures of their suffering by the scattering few who have escaped, and by those who have taken their lives in their hands and gone in the midst of it, have shocked the ears of civilized humanity the world over. The yearly report shows an increase of prisoners in all the categories. In "the improvement in prisons" it is noted that schools and lucrative labor have been introduced: the weaving of linen being the principal prison industry to the valuation of $51,076 for the year. It is equal in quality to the finest and sells for lesser price. There is no "convict labor question" in Russia. This portion of the report relates to the prisons of St. Petersburg and of other large cities, and refers not at all to exiles and certain other classes of convicts.

But the prison, like all other Russian questions, roots deep in the foundation soil of despotism. Mr. Kennan says, in a recent paper, that the famine, while primarily caused by a failure of crops, is indirectly due to corrupt and bad government. In no other country in Europe would a short yield in a single year reduce the farmers to a state of starvation. They are robbed, systematically, to the utmost limit, and corrupt local officers finish the process. This is illustrated by the following example:

Some peasants in a village in Siberia concluded one summer that, instead of selling their grain to a local speculator who had been buying it before this time, they would purchase or hire some barges, float their crop down the Yenisei river, and sell it for their own benefit, pocketing the profits of the middleman themselves. As soon as the local speculator heard of the plan he went to the chief of police and proposed that the latter should prevent the peasants from leaving their homes in order to compel them to sell their grain to him as usual, agreeing to divide the profits of the transaction. I ought, perhaps, to explain here that no peasant can go beyond a certain distance from his home without the permission of the government. Attracted by the prospect of making a good sum of money, the chief of police consented.

Without describing in detail the manner of the doing, the passports were refused, and at last, to pay their taxes, the peasants were obliged to sell to the local speculator at half the worth of their grain. The Russian peasant is intemperate, and both church and state encourage the vice, as the tax on spirits adds largely to the revenue of the government. Out of the bitterness of his knowledge Mr. Kennan says if any relief funds were to pass through the hands of Russian officers they might as well not be sent.

After reading these chapters we notice, with an indescribable feeling of hopelessness the figures which stand for conversion to the orthodox faith—the church of the empire. The number of converts has enormously increased within the last twenty years. In thirty years the orthodox population has doubled. The births in the Mussulman districts outnumber by a small fraction those in Catholic and Protestant districts. And yet almost within the time mentioned, the erstwhile Mussulman population is reduced nearly one-half by Christianity. True Christianism has a field white to the harvest in wide and wicked Russia. If the countries of the earth must help feed her robbed peasantry, then must they study causes as well as minister to results.

The Indianapolis Sentinel pours cold water and hot shot on the second-term boom in a most cruel manner. It brings forth "two facts in American history," and throws them at "Grover Cleveland" in this fashion: "First, no president since Andrew Jackson has been re-elected except in the great crises of war and reconstruction. Second, no president of Gen. Harrison's class has ever been re-elected. The only presidents who obtained a second term were Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Lincoln and Grant." The Sentinel is sure "not even Mr. Harrison's $50,000 consul-general to London would claim for a moment that he belongs in that immortal company."

The Chicago Herald, in a fit of temporary aberration of mind, laying down the trumpet it has been blowing for World's fair, asks, "Where is a man safe in Chicago?" It then proceeds to enumerate where he isn't safe, as follows: "If a man stays in the house he is poisoned by sewage water from the inshore crib. If he goes out and escapes locomotives, street-cars and other vehicles he is slugged by footpads." This settles it. If the wicked Chicagoan cannot escape death at home or abroad, the innocent people of the rest of the world are not going to take their lives in hand and go to the fair.

The World's fair business offers golden opportunities to that hysterical species of cranks which sees evil in all things. The latest development of the mania of this sort of cranks is found in a petition which has been presented to congress praying that in the art department "the statues be modestly clothed," and that "nude pictures be excluded from the art gallery."

The new governor of Morocco, after a late talk with the advance agent of an American circus who told him that the show embraced "the finest riding in the world," remarked to the interpreter: "What liars these Americans are!" which leads the Philadelphia Press to wonder what His Excellency would say if he could only read our tin-plate literature.

ALGER'S CANDIDACY.

It Is Causing His Business Deals To Be Looked Into.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 20.—The Journal to-night prints a two-column review of the decision of the supreme court of Michigan, identifying Gen. Russell A. Alger as one of the promoters and organizers of the gigantic diamond match trust and giving the sharp rebuke of Chief Justice Sherwood and Justice Champlin to the trust and to Alger. Says the chief justice:

"The Diamond Match company is an unlawful corporation against public policy, its object being to prevent competition and control the price of an article of necessity."

The suit grew out of turning over to the trust of the Richardson Match company, of Detroit, of which Alger was president.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Another of the four colliers that were recently dispatched to the Pacific by this government in expectation of war with Chile, has been heard from and intercepted at Teneriffe, where it arrived on Thursday. This makes three colliers that have been intercepted in the interest of economy, and th fourth is expected daily at Montevideo.

REFOM PRESS ASSOCIATION.

St. Louis, Feb. 20.—The national reform press association met in convention at the exposition building. The main topic of discussion at the morning session was the admission of members whose papers had supported candidates of the two old parties when there was a people's party candidate in the field in that state. The matter was finally referred to the committee on membership.

THE DUTIES OF A CITIZEN.

There is a sacred duty assumed by every man when he takes upon himself the rights of citizenship. It is that he shall give to the management of public affairs his best thoughts and his highest efforts. His relations to his fellow-citizens are those of a co-trustee. His responsibility is equal with theirs for the honest management of public affairs, for the guardianship of the weak, and for the unselfish enactment and enforcement of laws that shall be just alike to the poor and the rich; the weak and the strong.

The world rightly holds to strict accountability the man who after assuming a trust, neglects his duties and permits wrong to be done because of his negligence. In the great court of moral honor his sins of omission are greater than are those of the active despoiler. But for his base neglect of his duty the other could not have done the wrong.

Yet men are found—not one or two score, but a fair per centage of the total number—who ignore their duties, and then assume that they have ascended to a higher plane than their fellows who still attempt to guide public affairs. Such men are, unwittingly, playing the role of cowards, and they are largely responsible for the hideous things that are permitted to be done in the sacred name of liberty and popular sovereignty.

The greatest foe of honesty in the management of public affairs, the ally of the trading and tricky politician, and the powerful friend of all baser things in politics, is the ward caucus.

In the hands of intelligent, honest men who felt their responsibility to the state, it was capable of great good. It severed its connection with such men many years ago, and to-day it is their master and the master of city, state and nation.

Such men as sincerely tried to do their duty as citizens saw that their hands were tied in advance. The caucus met, not that neighbors might consult as to what was the greatest good of the greatest number, but simply to record the wishes of the few professional politicians who had the caucus in charge. Under these conditions the better class of men have felt that they were powerless to affect the management of affairs; that the verdict was made up beforehand, and their presence would not alter it one iota, so they have remained away.

The caucus is always one and the same thing in its make up and methods. A man of some respectability is chosen to preside. A secretary is elected. A call is made for business and "the gang" is ready. Its cohorts only look to the maker of a motion. If he is one of the gang, his motion goes. If an outsider attempts to be heard he is promptly voted down. Everything is usually done decently and in order, for the organization knows its strength and can afford to give the other people some rope; but the vote is always their way. Good citizens see the most honorable men in the ward voted down, and the bummers and professionals sent to conventions instead. They see some lightweight nominated for the council, because he has made his bargain with the ringsters, when a man of character, capacity and large interests is defeated. They go away disgusted with what they have seen, and with themselves for having assisted in it by their presence, and thereafter they ignore the caucus.

This is the common experience of every man who has no axe to grind. But it is not a fair excuse for any man to offer for shirking his duties. The caucus is what it is because it has been neglected. Tricksters have seen how very easy it was to control it by reason of the small number who attended. No honest citizen can afford to abdicate his rights and his duties in favor of the baser elements. The times are always calling for men who have the courage of their convictions, and no time more than now.

This home of ours, this city of Toledo, has the right to demand of us the fulfillment of the vows we assumed when we took upon ourselves the robes of citizenship. We are handing her down to posterity heavily in debt, and mortgaged for the next generation. At the head of affairs are the men who are acceptable to the bosses; men small both in capacity and in character.

Were every man to do his duty as he honestly sees it, this condition of affairs could not continue another year. Men of higher character and broader attainments would go to the front. Stealing would be less open and perhaps less in amount. Bargains would not be made by which law breaking is permitted openly and the kingdom that men pray for, but are afraid to vote for, would surely come nearer.

Burke says: "When bad men combine, the good must associate; else they will fall, one by one, an unpitied sacrifice, in a contemptible struggle."

Honest men of Toledo, is it not a fit time to associate for the public good?

Edison Being Frozen Out of His Own Company.

Rumored That a Big War Is Soon to Follow Between the Two Great Electric Corporations.

New York, Feb. 20.—Thomas A. Edison, the well-known inventor, is being frozen out of great interests of his own creation. The Edison Electric company, of which Mr. Edison was the chief stockholder, was organized three years ago by Henry Villard.

A plan has recently been perfected whereby a rival concern, the Thomas-Houston Electric company, will swallow up the Edison General.

The deal, from all that can be learned, was carried out without the concurrence of Mr. Edison. He has been opposed to it, and will, it is understood, retire from the board of directors. There is a report that Mr. Edison will organize an opposition company.

A BLIND TOLEDO BOY

Developing Into a Talented Violinist.

Charles Extine, the Seventeen-Year-Old Son of Polish Parents, Takes Columbus by Storm

Charles Extine, a Toledo lad but 17 years of age and totally blind, is, notwithstanding his misfortune gaining laurels by his superior work on the violin.

Extine is the son of Polish parents who reside at Air Line Junction. He is at present at the state asylum for the blind at Columbus. He is a remarkably bright boy, and is doing wonders with the violin.

For two years he has been studying the instrument, his tuition fees being paid through the kindness and liberality of two Toledo ladies, Mrs. Dr. Brigham and Mrs. Johnson. He has been under Prof. Bayer, and his advance has been rapid. Although unable to see at all, he has studied with such diligence and apparent love for his work that musicians acknowledge that he is a wonder.

Master Extine appeared this week in the musical event of the season at Columbus, the concert of the Columbus orchestra, and performed F. David's Fourth Concerto with such power, expression and finish that his encore was almost an ovation. He was repeatedly recalled, and carried off the honors of the evening.

Hans Von Schiller, the famous pianist, who has heard him play, says that his work on the violin is wonderful, and that he will make a furor on the concert stage. He also said that if the kind persons who have interested themselves in the boy could have heard his performance in the Columbus concert they would have been amply repaid for the help they have afforded him.

The lad hopes to continue his studies until he has memorized a repertoire of about 50 of the leading compositions, when he will be ready to take to the concert stage.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY SENATOR.

A Mississippian enjoys the distinction of being the only United States senator with a term running into the twentieth century. That distinction was thrust on him by his fellow citizens by an almost unanimous vote after this journal and others of patriotism had urged them to do it. The congratulations are mutual, for while the able and popular senator is thus especially distinguished amongst American statesmen, his fellow citizens have a servant to work for them equipped with gratitude, zeal and long experience. Mississippi maintains her reputation of rewarding capable and faithful congressmen. The name of our twentieth century senator is E. C. Walthall.—Vicksburg Herald.

THE MONOPOLY PROBLEM.

Prof. Adams' Able Analysis of Great Industries.

They Follow Naturally in the Economic Conditions Created by Machinery and Adequately Controlled Will Benefit All the People.

There was the usual good attendance at the High school hall last evening, to listen to the last of Prof. H. C. Adams' lectures on economics. Supt. Compton announced the lectures for the second course in the Toledo institute, and that the examination upon economics, for those who wished certificates, will be at a date not yet fixed. All papers to be submitted to Prof. Adams for the examination must be handed in to Mr. Compton not later than next Friday evening.

Prof. Compton then said that those who had been privileged to hear Prof. Adams' lectures desired in some manner to return to him their thanks for benefits derived. In behalf of all these, Prof. Compton said, he was requested to say to Prof. Adams that his Toledo pupils had experienced great benefits, their taste for political economy had been whetted, and they would highly prize the thoughts and truths that had been presented to them. The Toledo society heartily appreciates the benefits of their first course of lectures in the University Extension plan.

In response Prof. Adams said: "It has certainly been a great pleasure to me to give these talks, and I am very glad indeed if your ardor has not been dampened for university extension by me." With this characteristically modest acceptance of the thanks tendered, the lecturer took up the subject of the evening.

After a brief review of the preceding lectures, necessary to bring the subject of the evening clearly before his hearers, Prof. Adams proceeded to define and analyze the so-called "Monopoly Problem."

It is, he said, the most fundamental of all the questions of political economy, and if it be correctly solved, there will be no difficulty in dealing with subordinate questions. There is a distinction between great industries and monopolies, which are too often confused. Great industries are benefits, and the evils of monopoly follow the failure to secure adequate control of these great industries. The changes that have followed upon improved machinery and use of steam have instituted an era of organization. If we are to have the benefits of this organization, we must have the great industries, in themselves an invention.

These benefits, with which all real students of economics are familiar, were enumerated. What we lack, and what we must have to secure these benefits, is a guarantee of equivalence of exchanges. The proposed methods of securing this were reviewed; the securing of competition, which the lecturer rejected, because w have passed the era when competition achieved best results; the socialists remedy, of commercial prosperity under governmental management; and the modification of the last, which demands government ownership of means of transportation believing that all other monopolies will fall, without the support of the railroad monopoly.

Competition will work properly only when competitors have equality in strategic conditions. This was an 18th century condition and no longer exists. We have two problems, two opposite principles to maintain, fair prices on the one hand and free opportunity on the other. The monopoly problem will not be solved until we have properly adjusted these conflicting claims.

Prof. Adams believes that the injustices and irregularities which turn great industries into monopolies will not bear the light of publicity, and his proposed remedy is therefore, to turn the light upon these industries. He would have commissions, clothed with supervisory and regulatory authority, who should represent the public and uphold the rights of the public as against corporations.

The work which it was intended the interstate commerce commission should do in the case of railroads, he would have commissions created to do in all great industries. "If it be true," he said, "that you have an industry performing work that is really a public function, then that industry is of such importance to the public that it has no right to insist that its affairs are the private concern of the corporation only."

These views were probably an unexpected proffer of solution of the monopoly problem to most of Mr. Adams' audience, and a great many questions upon them were asked and answered in the study hour.

In speaking on municipal commissions Prof. Adams said it was, in his opinion, wise to try them. If anything should be owned and controlled by and for the people, he should say it was street railways, gas and water works. But if that line of control were entered on, it would be hard to check the trend in that direction. At what industry would municipal or state or federal ownership stop? It is better for the public to have adequate control of industries, than to assume their functions. In his opinion public commissions, with due authority, would amply secure that control.

The Second Course.

The sale of tickets on Monday, for the second course, was 70. About 100 more have been sold since, not counting those which were purchased of Miss King at the building last night. The high school hall, with the extra seats, as they have been brought in for Prof. Adams' lectures, seats not less than 450. The literary course will, therefore, be held in this hall, unless the number of tickets sold makes it absolutely necessary to change. The executive committee desires to avoid the expense which must be incurred in securing other quarters, unless the demand necessitates it. This second course, Prof. Isaac Demmon of Michigan university, lecturer, is upon "The Masterpieces of English Literature." The first lecture will be next Friday evening. Those who purchase course tickets can procure the books recommended in connection with the study, of Brown, Eager & Hull, at 20 per cent. reduction.

The Extra Lectures.

The executive committee of the University course are to be congratulated upon the distinguished speakers they have secured for the two lectures. On next Monday night Prof. John Fiske lectures in Memorial hall. No intelligent man or woman of Toledo can afford to miss the opportunity to hear this most distinguished author, historian and orator.

On Saturday, March 26, Prof. Mackinder, of Oxford (Eng.) university, will lecture on "The Ancient, Medieval and Modern Map of the World."

WILL KEEP THEM AT HOME.

All Germans May be Needed in the Near Future.

The Kaiser Taking Steps to Keep His Subjects From Taking Up Homes in Other Lands.

Berlin, Feb. 20.—The kaiser having got his education scheme well in hand, has now resolved to regulate emigration.

The new German emigration bill, soon to be introduced in the reichstag, requires all intending emigrants to give notice to the police a month before starting.

The notice must include a statement as to where they are going, and the police are required to publish such notice in a conspicuous place, so that all the public may know who the intending emigrants are and their place of destination. Agents are therefore forbidden to forward emigrants unless under written contract and the promotion of emigration by foreign governments and societies is prohibited.

POPULAR LADY DOROTHY.

A Septuagenarian Who Figures Very Largely in English Aristocratic Society.

Among the most beautiful of all the wreaths laid on the coffin of the late duke of Clarence appears to have been that of Lady Dorothy Neville, who was a great favorite at Sandringham and one of the best known figures in London society. In fact, I scarcely know what London society would do or be without her, says the Marquis de Fontenoy in the New York Recorder. She knows everybody, and during her long life of almost 70 years has been the confidante of statesmen, field marshals, bishops and diplomatists. Lady Dorothy hears everything. To her London society is one long whispering gallery. She occupies a position midway down the corridor and not a voice or footfall sounds without reaching her ears. Strange to say she is liked by women as well as by men. She has but few enemies of her own sex, or if they exist, there is scarcely one, who, from the knowledge that public opinion would be hostile to her if she were to avow her hostility, would dare to reveal it.

In politics, Lady "Dolly" is a democratic tory. As a tory she touches hands with, and regales upon clarets and cutlets, Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, as a democrat she is at home to Mr. Chamberlain, Jesse Collings, and Mr. Morley, while in Lord Randolph Churchill, who is her delight, she recognizes the coming man. She does not give dinner parties, but has organized a scheme of Sunday luncheons, at one of which a few weeks ago, just before Christmas, the prince of Wales was furnished with the opportunity of meeting Mrs. Brown Potter previous to her departure for the Cape of Good Hope.

Lady Dorothy is discriminatingly indiscriminate in her selection of guests and makes with much success raids into Bohemia, returning now with an author or journalist of repute, now with an actor or actress. When her company is a little perilously mixed with conflicting political elements and there is too much electricity in the air she takes care that there shall be two or three lightning conductors about her rooms in the shape of a litterateur, who will divert and disarm the destructive fluid, or an artist who will at the critical moment concentrate upon himself the attention of the guests, that of the heated controversialists included. This is Lady Dorothy's idea of a salon.

Her daughter, Meresia, is her inseparable companion and one of the most prominent organizers of the Primrose league. She is almost as great a character as her mother. The fair Meresia, who is I regret to say, on the shady side of 40 and still a spinster, has inherited much of her mother's wit, sprightliness and good nature. She drives a tandem, which is here, there, and everywhere when Meresia is engaged in her favorite diversion of canvassing votes for the tory candidate at some parliamentary election or other.

CIVIL ENGINEERS.

Their Increasing Importance With Growing Civilization.

The time was, not long ago, when the world recognized only three so-called professions. In the brilliant, though incomplete civilization of this century, however, it is being admitted that the men who save, to a great extent, be considered its creators shall rank with the priest, the doctor, and the lawyer as factors in the production of original thought, and in carrying out in practical shape of ideas which have been given to the world by themselves and their predecessors. It is indeed a question whether to the engineer is not due much the greater part of the intellectual work which, after many preparatory centuries, has produced the wonderful developments of our modern life. Without his wark, if left only to the ministrations of the other three learned professions, where would have been not only our railways and steamships, our telegraphs, telephones and electric lights, our sewing machines, sewing machines and a thousand and one other labor-saving implements in agricultural and domestic life, the machinery of our factories of all kinds and the steam engine itself, but even our buildings, roads, canals and bridges. In short if it were not for the scientific thought and practical execution of work due to the engineer we should be living still in a state little above that of barbarism.

It would take much space to trace in detail the history of this noble profession. Its beginnings were evidently in the line of military engineering. In those times such men as were found to have sufficient brains were spurred forward by the "political bosses," otherwise called kings, perhaps under the penalty of death or the loss of a pair of ears or some such slight incentive, to build forts and roads and bridges, as well as catapults and such other projectile-propelling machinery as the "state of the art" then permitted.

From such conditions arose the military engineer. As time went on, the vital importance of his work developed a certain importance in the man, until his occupation became one of respectability, calling for a considerable degree of learning and research. When, later on, the affairs of civil life became of considerable importance the civil engineer naturally appeared more or less distinctly separated from his military brother. His is by no means an extremely young profession, however, as the wonderful roads and bridges of Rome, Greece and even Egypt testify unto this day. How far the occupation of the architect was distinct from that of the engineer in those early times we cannot tell exactly, but then, as now, the two vocations must have been intimately dependent upon one another, even in cases when not practiced by the same individual. The popular impression that an architect is chiefly an artist, and an engineer only a scientist, is far from a correct one, as no great building can be made safe, durable, useful and beautiful without the scientific brain work of the engineer, strongly tempered by an ardent love of the beautiful as well as an intimate knowledge of the accepted principles of color and of form.—Engineering Magazine.

He will say it is shaken and broken up into tiny drops, becomes an emulsion; there are other changes, but this is the first.

REMARKABLE INCIDENT.

A Lecturer Discovers His Danger and Loses His Life—A Terrible Warning to Others.

It is a scene in the lecture-room of a medical college in New Orleans. The professor is lecturing before an intelligent class of medical students. He is describing the human body, its defects and the danger by which it is surrounded. In order to illustrate it he has fluids from the human body, which he is subjecting to chemical tests.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have described to you the appearance of the human fluid in a diseased state; I will now show you how the same fluid appears in a healthy state," and he subjected his own to the test. As he held it up to the light for a moment, his hand trembled, he caught his breath, he paled and exclaimed: "Gentlemen, I have just made a horrible discovery; I myself have Bright's disease of the kidneys."

In less than one year he was dead.

The above dramatic and strictly true incident shows the terrible danger and mysterious nature of this modern disease, which may well be called the demon of the present century. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms and fastens itself upon the system before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Hundreds of people die daily by what is called heart disease, apoplexy, paralysis, spinal complaint, rheumatism, pneumonia and other common diseases, when in reality it is Bright's disease of the kidneys. These are solemn facts, but all the more serious because of their solemnity.

There has never been but one remedy known for the cure of Bright's disease, or even for its relief, and that remedy has become the most popular of any preparation known in the world. It is Warner's Safe Cure. It has taken men, and women too, who were in the lowest stages and restored them to perfect health and strength. It will invariably check the first stages of this terrible disease, if taken in time. It is indorsed by physicians, approved by scientists and used by the best people in the land. It is a scientific preparation and owes its popularity wholly to its power. It can be procured of any reliable dealer, but great care should be exercised to secure the genuine and not permit any unscrupulous dealer to sell anything in its place.

Last night I heard one say in great content:
"Nay, I've ne'er supped of sorrow; tasted grief.
Grim care has never, like a threatening thief,
Robbed me of sleep. My days in peace are spent."
And straight I pitied him, as one long pent
Within the limit of low hills, whose chief
Concept of sea and storm and rugged reef,
Is fancy-formed, and with vague hearsay blent.
He ne'er has felt his sinews stretch and strain
In struggle with the wave's contending arm.
Nor heard the ocean-Infinite's alarm
Sound "Storm!" along life's level, sanded plain.

He has not known the privilege of pain.

The number of murders in this country last year amounted to 5,906, or 1,616 more than in 1890, and 3,339 more than in 1889. The executions in 1891 numbered only 123, of which 27 took place in the north and 96 in the south. That is, one murderer in 48 received capital punishment. During the same period the lynchings which outraged instead of avenged the law numbered 195, or 68 more than in any previous year. The lynchings all occurred in the states west of Ohio and south of Maryland.

This story of a capture of hibernating bears comes from the state of Washington. It is related by two citizens of Skipanon who saw the beasts in captivity: Their owner said that in cutting down one of the giant spruce trees common to that region, he discovered that one part of it was hollow, and, looking into the cavity, he made out three slumbering bears. Thereupon he nailed "slabs" of wood across the hole, and sawed off from the main trunk the section of tree in which the bears were housed. This he started down the mountain slide in the usual fashion, and the novel cage and its contents arrived safely at the bottom. The bears, which are in a state of semi-torpor, are now on exhibition.

A BAD WEEK AHEAD.

Professor Foster on the Weather Program.

Storms and Cold Waves Are Headed This Way.

The Atlantic Ocean Will Again be Lashed Into a Fury and Reports of Disasters Can be Expected.

Copyrighted, 1892, by W. T. Foster.

St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 20.—My last letter gave forecasts of the weather for the storm wave due to cross the continent from the 16th to the 21st, and the cool wave due to cross the continent from the 19th to the 23d. The next disturbance will reach the Pacific coast about the 22d, cross the western mountains by the close of the 23d, the great central valleys from the 24th to the 26th, and reach the Atlantic states about the 27th.

This will be an average storm, and its force will begin to rapidly increase on the 27th and 28th, as it moves out onto the Atlantic ocean.

The cool wave following it will cross the western mountains about the 25th, the great central valleys about the 27th, and the Atlantic states about the 29th. It will extend far into the southern states causing frosts that will do some damage.

An early spring may be expected. March and the first part of April will be very favorable to growing crops. But during the later growing season, rainfall will be deficient in many places; so much so that in various localities the crops of 1892 will be short.

Owing to the speculators' rings in New York and other great cereal trade centers, cotton is ruinously low. The crop for the purpose of speculation, has been largely overestimated.

If the planters could hold their cotton produced last year, I am confident that they would get a good price for it in the fall, for I have no doubt that a short crop will be produced this year.

The government fails in its duty when it fails to protect all classes of its citizens from the ravages of cormorants who prevent the law of supply and demand from regulating prices.

Drouths and Their Remedies.

There are two reasons why this is an opportune time for discussing drouths. One is that the time approaches for tree planting, and the other is the prospect of a deficiency of rainfall this year in parts of the United States.

I have discussed the influence of the arid districts on the drouths of the great central valleys, the influence of trees, cultivated on the plains, in restoring those arid countries to fertility, and the next step calls for a discussion of the natural forests of the western mountains.

The legends of the Aztecs tell us that those people, when occupying the western mountains, with their center of population about Great Salt Lake in Utah, including the Colorado River Valley and the table lands between the Rockies and the Sierras, destroyed the timber, from the effects of which the lakes and rivers dried up, and those people were compelled to abandon the country as were the Aryan tribes, our ancestors, compelled to abandon the table land of Asia, now called the Desert of Gobi, from the same causes.

The Aztecs removed to Mexico, and were so impressed with the cause of the blight in that country from which they migrated, that they enacted stringent laws protecting the timber in Mexico.

It is well known that since the white men occupied the great basin of the Salt Lake country, the growth of trees has been encouraged by Mormon laws, from the effects of which Great Salt Lake has increased seven or eight feet in depth.

The particular point to which I desire to direct attention is this: The timber on both sides of the Rocky mountains is being rapidly destroyed. This will dry up all the streams that enter the Missouri river from the west.

With the streams that flow eastward out of the Rocky mountains dried up, there will be no water for irrigation, and this will not prevent tree planting on the plains but will destroy great tracts of rich farming lands now under cultivation near the foot-hills of the Rockies.

It requires but moderate reasoning faculties to discern a great increase of the drouths in the great central valleys, including all the country of the great lakes, unless the destruction of timber in the Rockies and Sierras and their great plateaus is stopped.

We are idly floating toward the Niagara of destruction, toward that desolation that now holds the Great Sahara in its withering grasp. Eminent American citizens have made this declaration, but they take as a basis of their prediction, the destruction of the northern pineries, but the destruction of western forests and the planting of trees in arid districts will have very little influence on our climate that will the same conditions on our northern boundaries.

The destruction of northern pineries will decrease the rainfall in the countries where the pineries exist, and decrease the depth of water in the Mississippi and the great lakes, but will not very greatly affect the rainfall in other parts of the country, except, perhaps, Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana, while the destruction of the forests in the western mountains will decrease the rainfall in every state from the gulf to the British line and from the Alleghanies to the Rockies.

Every person who owns a lot, an acre or a farm can do something toward retarding the encroachments of drouth by planting trees, for every tree is an armed soldier standing sentinel and doing battle against that great enemy, whose fiendish design ever is to cover up fertile lands with drifting sands, turning them into withering deserts.

If every such owner of land will cause one tree to grow where none grew before, or two trees to grow where one grew before, repeating the good work every year, the drouths will be driven back and the present fertile country protected from the desert sands.

Children should be taught the value of trees and the wickedness of wantonly destroying them. By trees I mean all kinds and sizes, from the hazel twig to the monarch of the forest. Protect all the trees and plant more. Cultivate those that will pay best for food, furniture or building purposes. Fruit trees are as good as any.

When Arbor Day comes devote your time to tree planting, and as it approaches hold meetings for the purpose of discussing the subject and enthusing your neighbors with its importance. Every debating society, farmers' organization and board of trade should at least give one evening to the discussion of this subject between this and Arbor day, and on that day there should be thousands of speeches made. Preachers can find pertinent texts, especially in the Old Testament, from which to discuss this subject.

Our people do not realize the danger there is in destroying our forests and increasing the amount of cultivated lands without largely increasing the cultivation of groves. Get ready to plant trees.

If sick headache is misery, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

MUCH NEEDED CANAL.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Senator Hiscock, of New York, has introduced several memorials from commercial bodies asking congress to pass a bill for the construction of a ship canal around Niagara Falls. FACTS FROM FINDLAY.

The Beet Sugar Industry Being Boomed.

Final Meeting in Session To-Day—Boy Drowned—More Divorces—General Mention.

Findlay, O., Feb. 20.—Little Tommy, the 5-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Hamon, residing in the northern part of the city, slipped off a footboard on which he was crossing Howard's run and fell into the water and was drowned yesterday afternoon. His little lifeless body was found down the stream in a pile of driftwood. Efforts to resuscitate proved of no avail. Coroner Howell will investigate the case and attend to the interment. The parents are nearly distracted over the sad affair.

Final Meeting.

A large number of prominent farmers and business men held the final meeting to-day at the court house to settle the acreage for the proposed beet sugar refinery. The amount required was 4,000 acres for 10 years and this amount it is thought, will be pledged. Great interest has been worked up over the proposed new industry. This will be the first plant of the kind east of the Mississippi.

The daily press of this city have had a number of communications from both sides since their card appeared.

WOMAN'S WAY

Of Expressing Her Opinions on Current Topics.

Good Notes from Frac—Minus X and His Hennery—Two Luncheons —Our Scotch Guest.

MOSSES FROM AN OLD MANSE.

The minister's wife had just finished her chores,
By calling on all the church people;
And some she'd found open as both the church doors,
And some she'd found stiff as a steeple.

For while all the deacons had slept on the wall,
A committee had come like a lion;
And by giving her husband a generous call,
Had shaken the bulwarks of Zion.

For years they had paid him who taught them the Word,
About six hundred dollars or seven;
For they felt that a preacher should "trust in the Lord,"
And grow fat on the "manna from Heaven."

And so the cash question had come to annoy;
Which with ministers frequently rankles;
For the Lord had sent children—three girls and a boy,
And the boy—hollow down to his ankles.

Sister Blodgett, the wife of "a pillar," had cried,
(They supported a carriage and horses.)
"Beware! lest you sin against God," she had sighed;
"A rolling stone gathers no mosses."

The preacher looked up from the book which he read,
And his merry eyes twinkled with laughter,
"Why didn't you tell Sister Blodgett," he said,
"That moss isn't what we are after."
—Dr. Dowling, in N. Y. Independent.

Fancies versus Facts.

Walt Whitman's latest published poem runs as follows:

Animals.

I think I could turn and live with animals,
they are so placid and self-contained,
I stand and look at them long and long.
They do not sweat and whine about their condition,
They do not lie awake in the dark and weep for their sins,
They do not make me sick discussing their duty to God,
Not one is dissatisfied, not one is demented with the mania of owning things,
Not one kneels to another, nor to one of his kind that lived thousands of years ago,
Not one is respectable or unhappy on the whole earth.

And Mr. Whitman was country born. "They do not sweat." Did he never see the plow horses or the stump pulling oxen? "Not one is dissatisfied." Did he never see a horse or cow scraping all the hair off its neck reaching through the fence for the clover in the next pasture? "No one is demented with the mania of owning things." Did he never see a pig demented with the idea of routing all the other pigs away from the trough and possessing himself of the entire contents of that food receptacle? "Not one kneels to another." Not much, but did the poet who longs to live with the animals never see a sharp-horned cow drive all the other "critters" into a corner? They don't stop to kneel, oh, no; they get out of the way. "Not one is unhappy on the whole earth." Did he never hear a poor cow mother bawl and cry for her bossy-calf for days and nights, which cruel fate or the butcher had taken from her? Did he never see a poor old horse belabored till it was ready to drop dead? When he says "Not one is respectable," he comes near redeeming the whole mass of inconsiderate fibs. The strife for "respectability" does wear out a good deal of human nature.

Philadelphia is having a board of education quarrel which will go into the courts of law. A woman was nominated for principal of one of the schools, and confirmation was refused on the ground that she was ineligible because of her sex. One paragraph in the laws declares that males only shall be eligible as principals; another section defines the qualifications, which being fulfilled, "he or she" is eligible, from which it would appear that the school law needs revision. As one argument, the president of the board cited the fact that there were 2,500 female teachers to 62 men at present in the public schools of that city. A woman teacher congratulated the president on having "saved the much-abused men from the terrible women."

It is a bad showing for the men, but it is presumed if salaries with numbers were considered, a large grain of comfort would be found. The question seems to resolve itself into one of different import from the apparent contention—shall men teachers be crowded from the public schools? Is it an illustration of the classification of labor—left to adjust itself to natural conditions? Perhaps there's the mighty dollar in it first and foremost—women do as good work for less pay. In Toledo not so many years ago, we had the example of a woman, a teacher of ripe experience, acting as substitute for a man principal, at the wage paid her in a subordinate position. According to all accounts she gave better satisfaction than her man predecessor, and when it was known that he would not return she applied for the place. An inexperienced man was put in her stead at an advanced salary, and she was kindly invited to initiate him in the ways and methods of the work she had so well in hand!

If women insist upon crowding into places where mental labor is employed in lieu of doing so much manual labor of various kinds as has fallen to her lot heretofore—if she elects to plead law or practice medicine where her sister before her was content to wash windows, whitewash ceilings, dig the potatoes in the family garden, and break her back with the family washing and churning, and is able by virtue of over-efficiency or underbidding to command these places, then her brother must drop into some of the vacancies thus created. It is a natural adjustment, founded as it should be upon other basis than that of sex or "previous condition of servitude."

Maragret Fuller used to be accounted a very wise woman; and doubtless she was, as she is credited with having once said: "Never talk about yourself, your diseases, your domestics, your dresses. Talk about your friends' interests, not your own."

Thus would Margaret confine some women's conversational capabilities within very close limit, and especially was this true in the day in which Margaret spoke and wrote; but she lived a generation ahead of her time, and she would be still ahead of her time were she alive to-day. The privilege to talk about "your friends' interests and not your own," leaves a large loop hole. Personal gossip is the national failing; almost the national disgrace. It is in the very air we breathe. Men and women advertise their own merits and charms as unblushingly as they do their business. The thirst for notoriety is as intense, as prevalent, and in some of its phases as pitiable as the thirst for strong drink. It has taken the blush from the fruit of unassuming merit and honest commendation. A printed line of praise for actual good work calls forth the inquiry, how much did that cost him? And it is no wonder such query is made.

Mrs. French Sheldon, the woman who penetrated into the interior of Africa in her travels, and lived to come home to tell about it, corrects the modern business idea of a woman's luggage in a shawl strap when she goes on such an expedition. Mrs. Sheldon carried with her a magnificent white silk ball dress and other fine accessories, and dazzled the eyes of the sooty chieftains with her attire, on occasions. The old, old idea clings, like the mussel to the rock, a woman shorn of her good clothes lacks her possible impressiveness, even among the savages of Africa.

Money invested in floral decorations this season would go far towards paying the national debt.—Ex.

There it goes again, the wretched materialism of this iron age. Money spent for flowers, music, art, literature and finer culture by way of example in sentiment and the creation of a finer, purer atmosphere, is wasted. This free, happy and prosperous country has no business with a big national debt and with people too poor or too stingy to buy flowers and other beautiful things that brighten the days of life.

The Pittsburg Dispatch finds a new cause of throat trouble in women of society. It is not to be attributed so much to decollete dressing as to the effort to make oneself heard at crowded receptions and parties where all talk together, and each one strives to make herself heard. Rather an unpleasant commentary on "polite society."

It's very convenient for crowded newspapers. The leader of New York society has his aristocracy so well listed a journal concludes an account of a swell affair as follows:

"To say who was there would be only to repeat the lists so often printed. It is sufficient to note that the leaders of society were out in full force."

TWO LUNCHEONS.

A True Story with an Evident Moral.

A. and B. are near neighbors. Last summer they bought a lot of wheat in the field, two miles from their homes, and harvested it together. They had luncheon sent to them at noon.

Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. are both good, industrious women, but they differ widely in their manner of managing things, as may be seen from the difference in the luncheons prepared for the hungry harvesters. Mrs. A.'s bread was fine and white and she was proud of it. But as she cut it an observant observer might easily detect in it a sour, yeasty smell, which showed that she kneaded her dough when she had time, and not when it was ready. And then at the ends of the loaf there were raw, soggy portions that "packed together" when the slices were cut.

She used a dull knife and the slices were unsatisfactorily thick in places and in other places so thin you could see through them. She spread the slices hastily with butter that was nice she thought, because it was yellow. But what smell is that? It is the acid that generates in milk that is not skimmed until you are short of crocks and can't put it off any longer, and is more highly flavored by the acid generated in cream that stands waiting until you have a good, big churning to do "at once." The butter was sickeningly soft—but, then, the weather was hot. For meat there was a lot of sausage that had been "fried down," (picture it, think of it!) and had kept as good as fresh, Mrs. A. said. Bah! said the observant observer.

Well, to be sure, "they would need something sour to make the dinner taste good." (They would, indeed, said the obst. obsr.) So she put in a plentiful supply of huge pickles that had been in brine, and then soaked in water, and finally soured in a brass kettle with vinegar in which was dusted a spoonful of red peper. There was still room enough in the basket for a dozen soggy, greasy fried cakes, and for a putty-colored pie, the bottom crust of which was soaked with the juice of the cherries of which the pie was made. It hadn't been taken out of the pan, 'cause the pan seemed too warmly attached to it. Pie and pan both seemed to be case-hardened. Then the dinner was covered with an old piece of canton flannel. It was washed white and clean, but yet the shape of it suggested a ripped up old under garment.

Whew! said observant observer. (Mrs. A.'s children's clothes are tucked and ruffled and starched so that it is a weary "job" to do them up, and a wearying task to wear them. The sewing on them is very faulty.)

Mrs. B.'s luncheon for tired harvesters: She placed in a large basket a beautiful golden brown loaf and a bright sharp knife with which to cut it. It was thoroughly baked, and no one could smell yeast in it when it was cut. She put in a few graham gems, for those who preferred them. And a teacup in which was packed butter that the observant observer thought he could eat without a bit of bread, so sweet it was, and hard enough, for she kept a milk crock full of ice cold water placed on top of her butter jar. She covered all with a heavy clean piece of blanket. She did not understand capillary attraction, but she knew that the blanket was arranged as to soak up the cold water out of the crock—this ran down the sides and how could the butter in that jar get soft? Evaporation kept it cool. She skimmed her milk when she ought, and churned when the cream was fit. And washed the butter milk out of her butter when the butter was in little grains in the churn. So she did not have to work it to grease.

In the same basket with the bread she put tea spoons, some little sauce dishes, a bottle of sweet cream and a can of delicious peaches, and some of the daintiest, crisp little cookies. Observant observer felt his mouth watering. Now what? he thought, as she went to the kitchen stove and took from it her little fire-clay kettle which stood there with boiling water in it. She quickly poured the water out of it, wiped it dry and in a twinkling she had it half filled with potatoes which had been cooked in another kettle and cooked in such a manner that they looked like balls of flaky snow. Then she filled the kettle with fried chicken, pouring gravy over it, and took an old plate out of the hot oven and covered the whole delicious mess with it. She had "a little brown jug" on the stove, with hot water in it, which was soon replaced by coffee, the smell of which almost made observant observer beg for some. She said with evident satisfaction, now these things will stay hot and tone up the poor stomachs that have been overloaded with cold drinks all forenoon. She had put baby's little tin cups in the "cold basket" already described. She covered the basket with a large cloth neatly hemmed; it was white as snow, and by the shiny, frosty looking flowers on it, you could see that it was the end of an old linen table cloth, the middle of which had worn out. The good part had been hemmed and saved, but it in no shape or manner suggested that it had ever been made with "a straddle." She soon had the whole feast stowed away in the buggy, and a bright little boy fresh and ruddy and cool and clean looking, drove the comfortable-looking well-fed mare at a jolly trot so as to "get there" while things were hot. He stopped at Mrs. A.'s gate where her boy was waiting with the basket loaded with dyspepsia wads. Mrs. A.'s boy had a lazy dull look, and his face suggested pickles, pork, pie and patent medicine.

Mrs. B's children's clothes are made neat and plain, their beauty consists in the fit, the good material, the good sewing, and above all, their coolness in summer, warmth in winter, and in their fresh cleanliness. Their clothing seems always to have about them that delicious smell which you notice in a basket of linen fresh from the clothes line.

A Woman's Interest.

Every intelligent man knows that the voice of woman is becoming more potent and powerful in public matters. It is not necessary to subscribe to any doctrine of suffrage to perceive this and to admit it. Women, students in the same colleges and institutions of learning with men, working beside men in the same offices, stores and workshops, writing at the same desks for magazines and newspapers, discussing the same questions in the public prints, cannot be excluded from an active interest in the discussion of the vital questions of municipal reform. There is no reason why they should not be excluded.

The solution of the questions of urban living demands the best thought and every variety of thought. Admitting that the brain and heart and experience of woman are not that of man, yet all that she knows should be brought to bear in the betterment of a world in which men and women must dwell and toil together, and grow better or worse to the end.—Kansas City Star (editorial).

THE OLD STORY.

He talked about divinity, and pondered on infinity,
And spoke of base humanity as animalculae.
He studied up astronomy, the science of autonomy,
And wondered if insanity was common to the flea.

He plunged into zootomy and wandered through philebotomy,
And read for weeks on history from Adam down to date.
He lectured on theogony and dwelt upon cosmogony,
And sounded deep the mystery attending human fate.

He showed extreme anxiety for late and early piety,
And spoke with great felicity of higher states than this.
He lectured quite dramatically to show how systematically
The force of electricity was centered in a kiss.

But while with such intensity he spouted on immensity,
His wife with sweet devexity was cutting quite a dash;
And with such ingenuity she monkeyed his annuity,
He found to his perplexity she'd dressed away his cash.

—Cloak Review.

Minus X in a Quandary.

Dear Household: Last week I attended a "Mothers' Meeting" and was treated so very nicely that once more will "pluck up courage," as the old saying goes, to doff my hat and enter the sacred door of the "Household." Surely Sister Prim will give me a welcome if no one else. I guess Uncle Ben is away from home. The ladies of the Presbyterian social are going to meet at our house Thursday of this week to indulge in a quilting, and I'm going to pry around a little and if possible glean information enough from those present to warrant me in making a strike for the "partnership price." What bothers me is to know which side of the question to take. If I favor the scheme my partner—excuse me please—Mrs. X might think I was after a share of her butter and egg money. If I oppose it the "rude wife" may cut off my "pin money" entirely.

By the way, can any member of the Household tell me how to build a first-rate poultry house? There's got to be a new one this spring, or hot cakes'll be to pay. It isn't going to be a one-horse (one hen I mean) affair either.

A few years since I tried my level best to see what there was in winter poultrying. From one hundred hens during the months of January and February we got from fifty to ninety eggs every day and it was very cold weather, too. With a new poultry house there's no telling what might be the result.

Was glad to hear from Imogen again. Would like to be a cowboy for a while to help her bake slap jacks. Well, if I don't get a broomstick for bringing poultry and other trash into the household, perhaps I'll come again. MINUS X.

Odd Bits.

Ladies' clubs, ladies' teas, ladies' receptions and lastly, ladies' card parties; men's clubs, men's dinners and "stag" parties generally. Is it well this division of society which frees convivial men from the restraining influence a lady's presence always has? Separated in business interests, separated in social interests, separated in church interests; how long will the homes be able to stand the strain?

* * * * *

Just imagine one man saying to another, "Never mind anything else, I like you, let us start a business together. Never mind your tastes or habits, ambitions or aims, we like each other and nothing else matters." Why not give some such proposition as that, a high sounding name when just such compacts are made daily between men and women in the name of love?

* * * * *

Did you ever realize how different the world might look to you seen always through a back window? I called to see a woman about some work and was not at all favorably impressed with the appearance of her rooms. A glance from the window convinced me that they could not have been very pleasant at their best. I have come to the conclusion that more than half of that class of unfortunates are not miserable because they are shiftless but shiftless because they are miserable. Discomfort of any sort takes ambition from the ordinary mortal and we are chiefly ordinary mortals. Why, during the days when the cold first came and the gas left the unprepared for hours at a time almost without fire I have seen my lady doing absolutely nothing while the dust lay two days deep over her always before bright rooms, and a pair of shoes under the couch told all sorts of tales. This woman's rooms were small and crowded and from the windows one had a free and unobstructed view of only the wrong side of everything, even life itself. Small wonder if there is very little optimism among that class, for they are only human.

The average filter is not readily cleansed and a neglected filter is utterly worthless if not productive of harm. One that can be easily kept clean and is at the same time inexpensive may be made by placing several layers of absorbent cotton in a large glass funnel. All impurities are taken from the water as it passes through the cotton, which can be replaced every day or two and a roll will be found to last a long time. Both can be procured at the druggist's.

American and Scotch Hospitality.

A dear warm hearted Scotch lady whose home is in Gourock on the Clyde and who is making her first visit in this country with friends in New York and Brooklyn, writes:

"I very much appreciate your friendliness in introducing me to your Household Conference Corner, and regret the poverty of material that has been accorded such flattering distinction. In the warm invitation to become in very deed a member of your right worshipful guild I find the same unstinted hospitality that is pressed upon me here in this isle of two cities, outside of our family circles. To "use hospitality without grudging" seems to be an article of faith with all you Americans. Of course, I do not say that the virtue is unknown in Scotland. To libel my mother country would be a poor way of commending myself to your good offices; it would be at the same time, to tell an outrageous untruth. To be shy of taking the initiative lest they be considered pushing, is a strong characteristic of my countrymen. Once that is adjusted, we can entertain strangers, too. It is the unwonted leisure that gives me opportunity to accept so many pleasant socialities, and time to assimilate them to such a degree that life lately has had an unusual share of "beer and skittles."

We went and heard the Kendalls, I had never heard them in my own country. What a happy, high-bred looking woman Mrs. Kendall is. How I did enjoy her natural peace of manner. Like Partridge at the play, my criticisms may fall wide of the mark, so please consider me to have said the correct thing, without further venture on thin ice. Here a story comes in:

A certain young candidate for a pulpit in a remote parish in Scotland had given his text and started his sermon, but was not quite up to the capacity of his hearers. One of them being slightly deaf had lost the thread of his discourse. To catch on again the worshiper whispered to his next neighbor, "Whaur's his grun?" (where's his ground). "Grun," contemptuously repeated the old dame, "He has nae grun; he's soomin'" (swimming). See the application?

As I close this letter (a private letter to your hostess, and pilfered for the Householders), there comes a letter from my yokefellow, the other side of the sea, written February 2, saying, "the days are dull and dark and dreary and a whole gale is driving up the Firth of Clyde, quite in its usual way." Over there we do not have warmth in the atmosphere till April. Here in New York there are, to be sure, some strange mutations in the mercury but there is heat in the strong bright sunlight, and there are signs of spring.

Yours,
CATHARINE B—.

The Scrap Basket.

A Boston doctor arises to say: The uncovering of heads in elevators in the face of a cold draught is sometimes a trifling with health of no small moment, and when aged and infirm men are seen to follow this ceremony in deference to half-grown schoolgirls in furs the business of public politeness seems to be altogether overdone.

Why is it we gather our sorrows
And nurse them until we are sad?
Forgetting the sunny to-morrows,
The past that was peaceful and glad.

An old-fashioned "what-not" is often a source of annoyance to its possessor, and may be redeemed from ugliness by hanging across the front of each shelf a fringed valance of plush. If it is open at the back, hang a silk drapery, of the same color as the plush, from the back of the top shelf to the bottom, making a rich background, against which your dainty bric-a-brac will show most charmingly.

A marble mantel may be made to look artistic by covering with soft gray linen which has been embroidered in gayly colored silks, and trimmed with a silk tassel fringe of all imaginable bright colors.

Underskirts at present, probably because the upper skirt must be held up, are richer than ever. They are even richer than the dress itself. Thus, under a woolen dress of the most modest description, you may see a rich silk skirt of the same color as the overdress, and trimmed with plaited out frills of the same silk. There is a new silk made especially for these underskirts, and is called the frou-frou silk—the "rustling" silk, one might say in English.

Digestible Foods.

Invalids and children and those who are troubled with dyspepsia should be particularly careful in their daily diet, eating only of those foods which are readily assimilated in the system; also, eating only at regular times, thus giving the stomach a frequent opportunity to rest and gain strength.

Among those foods which digest most easily of all, we find chicken, turkey, mutton, sweet-breads, partridge, pheasant, grouse, mutton broth, and beef tea; perch, haddock and nearly all kinds of fresh fish; raw and roasted oysters; stale bread, rice, arrowroot, sago and all cereals, such as oat flakes, rolled oats, wheatlet, etc., and all prepared foods; asparagus, cauliflower, baked apples, oranges grapes, peas, beans, carrots, parsnips and peaches; toast-water, milk and black tea; poached eggs.

Among those which are not so easy of digestion as the above-named, yet which are not considered indigestible, come the following: Beef, lamb, duck, young pigeons, snipe, rabbit and wood-cock; soups, eggs (not hard-boiled), and butter; codfish, pike, trout, turtle, stewed or broiled oysters; potatoes, beets, turnips, spinach, cabbage, artichokes, celery, strawberries and lettuce; bread, jellies, marmalades, cooked fruits, raw apples and rhubarb; all farinaceous puddings; cocoa and coffee.

All of the following are more or less difficult to digest, and should not be indulged in by any but those who are well and strong, and, in any case, only moderately: All kinds of pork, fresh or salt; veal, goose, liver, brains and heart; mackerel, salmon, herrings, halibut; all salt fish, lobster, crabs and shrimps; hard boiled eggs; fresh bread and hot breadstuffs, pastry and cake; cucumbers and mushrooms; plums, pears, cherries and pine-apples; nuts, salads, pickles, chocolate.

There is a Difference

In make up: Most baking powders contain ammonia or alum. Cleveland's does not, not a particle; it is composed of pure cream of tartar and bi-carbonate of soda, with a little flour to keep the strength, nothing else. That is why Cleveland's is the most wholesome.

In strength: A rounded teaspoonful of Cleveland's Baking Powder does better work than a heaping teaspoonful of any other; a large saving on a year's bakings. That is why Cleveland's leavens most.

In results: With most baking powders cake is coarse grained, gets dry and "husky;" with Cleveland's, it is fine grained, keeps moist and fresh. That is why Cleveland's leavens best.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Blue Jeans at the Wheeler Last Night.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal's Engagement—E. S. Willard in The Middleman—The Fairies' Well—Dramatic Notes.

Joseph Arthur's homelike comedy, Blue Jeans, was presented to a good sized audience at Wheeler's last evening, and the performance brought out plenty of laughter and applause, with a few tears now and then.

As has been previously stated, the piece is founded on country life in a small, out-of-the-way town, and the peculiarities of the people are faithfully depicted.

The company presenting it is an excellent one, with Arthur C. Moreland as Col. Risner, the country politician, who always wants to make speeches; Lawrence Hanley as Perry Bascom, the manly hero; Laura Burt as June, and Harriet Ford as Sue, together with others who were well fitted for their parts. A number of excellent specialties were introduced, and a highly sensational scene is produced in a saw mill when the burly foreman tries to murder the hero by sawing him in two.

The piece is being presented at a matinee this afternoon, and will be repeated this evening. The indications are that the audience this evening will be larger than last night.

Benefit.

The Theatrical Mechanics' benefit will occur at Wheeler's to-morrow evening, and a large number of seats have been sold. The performance promises to be a good one, as some splendid specialties have been secured.

Several of the members of the Fairies' Well company will also assist in the entertainment.

Fairies' Well.

"The Fairies' Well," which is to be given at the People's next week by W. H. Power's company, finds its name in the old legend that on Halloween whoever looks into the fairies' well will see the face of his sweetheart therein. An episode of this sort is only an incident of the play, but is made to serve an excellent romantic purpose.

There are four acts, into each many spirited scenes and incidents are introduced in the effort to preserve Eunice Beresford, of Beresford house, from the attempts of Dan Carmody to gain possession of her estate. Her father, before dying in a distant land, gives a large sum of money to a friend, Jonah Kelly, with strict injunctions to deliver it to the daughter in time to save Beresford house from Dan Carmody, who holds a mortgage that is fast maturing. The messenger on his arrival meets Carmody and incautiously mentions the object of his mission. He is then plied with liquor, and directed to travel a certain path that will lead him across a broken bridge over Farrell's pool.

Carmody anticipates that he will drown, and then intends to ride his money belt. Kelly falls into the trap, but is rescued by Larry Dee, the good genius of the story, who subsequently overhears Carmody's plot from his own lips. After the rescue Kelly disappears, and the attempts of both parties to discover his whereabouts furnish some important features of the dramatic action.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal.

Friends of art will rejoice in the visit to this city of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal and their interesting company. An agreeable evening spent with Mr. and Mrs. Kendal in the service of meritorious and meaningful plays will endear them to refined theater-goers, and give them a respected place in the regard of an even less fastidious public. The Kendals have done the stage an incalculable benefit through their refined influence. All that tends to elevate the sentiment of the masses, to instil gentle precepts and to arouse a taste for refined enjoyment, tends to educate people up to the appreciation of high effort in any direction.

Since two years ago, when Mr. and Mrs. Kendal first visited this country, they have, as most playgoers are aware, achieved on the occasion of their two American engagements, a success that whether regarded from an artistic or pecuniary point of view can only be described as phenomenal. With a unanimity as striking as it has been gratifying, the press and the public of the United States at once recognized in the impersonations of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal the very perfection of dramatic art, and their extraordinary reception of sustained success are among the most noteworthy events in the history of the modern stage.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal will make their first and only appearance in this city at the Wheeler opera house, next Saturday evening in George Ohnet's popular play of the French stage, "Serge Panine."

Mrs. Kendal's performance is meritorious in many ways. Very few actresses are able to play emotional and comedy characters with equal success, and while the infinite art of this lady gives her strength in all branches of stage work, she shines resplendent as a comedienne. Of Mrs. Kendal it may be truly said that she was born for the stage, and whether in merry or serious mood is captivating and exquisite. There is in Mrs. Kendal's acting a peculiar fascination that cannot be better defined than by suggesting that her acting is so near a counterpart of nature that the critical faculty is not challenged by it. Mr. Kendal's impersonations are refined, impressive and clever. His native endowments are many and thus this talented couple complement each other in a manner irresistibly pleasing.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendal will not play in this country after their present tour, which is their farewell visit. After their engagement in this country they have contracted a tour in England next autumn which includes Liverpool, Dublin, Glasgow, Birmingham, Bristol, Brighton and many other English towns. Following this the Kendals will have a season at a London theater, when they will present a series of new plays.

Edward S. Willard.

The engagement of Edward S. Willard, the English actor, at Wheeler's opera house, one night, February 23d, is one of the most important of the season. Mr. Willard's fame, though well established in London, is comparatively new in this country. When Mr. Irving paid us his first visit, Mr. Willard was a stock actor in London, though a very popular one. Since that time the younger artist has climbed the ladder of fame and placed himself at Mr. Irving's elbow in the world of dramatic art. Four seasons ago, Mr. Willard after eighteen years of service in the stock companies of the provincial cities and of London, leased a theater for himself and placed himself at the head of a strong producing company. He immediately attracted wide attention.

Mr. A. M. Palmer, who saw his work, entered into negotiations with him for an American tour. After some time this was arranged and last season he appeared at Palmer's theater, New York. This was at the beginning of Mr. Willard's New York engagement, which continued for twenty-two weeks.

Mr. A. M. Palmer, who fully appreciates the value of a perfectly balanced performance, has surrounded Mr. Palmer with a company of remarkable excellence, Miss Marie Burroughs having the place of honor next to Mr. Willard. For years she has been known through her work as leading lady of Mr. Palmer's New York company as one of the most painstaking and artistic of America's leading actresses. Mr. Willard is this season devoting himself to only two plays, "The Middleman" and "Judah." His tour has carried him to San Francisco and back, and everywhere his triumph has been unquestionable. He will present in Toledo "The Middleman," which has been his chief success and which is said to be the most powerful work yet written by the distinguished British dramatist, Henry Arthur Jones.

Dramatic Notes.

That clean bright comedy, The Private Secretary, will be presented at Wheeler's, Monday evening, February 29th.

Rice's Evangeline company will play the last of a very successful week's engagement at the People's this evening.

A neat bit of grotesque character work is contributed to "The Middleman," by Harry Holliday in the role of Epiphany Danks.

It was at first expected that Mr. E. S. Willard the talented English actor, would play two nights in Toledo, Tuesday and Wednesday, but the engagement has been cut down to one performance, Tuesday night.

Among the many specialties introduced by the "Fairies Well" company is the silver bell quartette. Their work on the bells, and the dancing of Manning and Davis, and the Starr Sisters, is a fine bit of work which adds much to the play.

The annual reception and entertainment of the Toledo Press club will be given at Wheeler's opera house some time within the next six weeks. It will be a bright farce comedy, written for the occasion by Mr. George W. Stevens, who will also play a star part in the comedy.

OUR NATIONAL BIRD.

It has been proposed lately to ornament the tip of the flagstaff used in the regular army of the United States with the representation in metal of the bald eagle, which is the emblem of our republic. The staffs of regimental standards now terminate with pikes. The eagle has already done duty in this way upon the standards of other nations and particularly upon those of Rome and France. The American eagle, however, is of a different variety from the eagle of France and the Roman republic. It is of an American variety—the "bald," or white-headed eagle. The ordinary name of the bird is a misnomer. It is not bald, but simply white-headed, the feathers on the head and neck of adult specimens being snowy white.

The honor of first naming this bird as the emblem of the United States belongs to John J. Audubon, the naturalist, whose name will be forever associated with our bird life. He called the bald eagle the "Washington eagle," because, he thought, Washington was brave, as the eagle is. Like it, too, he was the terror of his enemies, and his fame, extending from pole to pole, resembles the sourings of the mightiest of the feathered tribe. If America has reason to be proud of her Washington, so has she to be proud of her great eagle. The latter, with wings extended, or "displayed proper," as it is called in heraldry, was made the emblem of the United States in the year 1785.

Benjamin Franklin did not approve the choice. The bald eagle, he declared, was a very evil-disposed bird, who would not earn an honest living, but got his livelihood by violence, deceit, and rapine. He did not consider such a creature the worthy emblem of a people who had gallantly driven out of their country all kingly birds of prey. Franklin's critical judgment did not prevail. It is true, as he declared, that the bald eagle lives chiefly by violence and theft, swooping down upon the osprey, and snatching from this industrious bird the fish that it has just caught. But the eagle, on occasion, can take fish out of the water with great skill. The eagle is, moreover, a bird of dignity, as well as of bravery and beauty, and its strong attachment to its young and to its home certainly recommends it as an American.—Baltimore Sun.

MEXICAN WAY OF DOING BUSINESS.

A friend of mine, representing a big American implement house, went to Durango, a short time ago and then started out to solicit trade. He had a lot of samples in Durango and was prepared to do a big business. He worked a week and did not get an order. Finally he met a young man who had lived several years in Mexico, and began to abuse the country to him.

"I know what's the matter with you," said that young man, "you are in too big a hurry. You talk plows and reapers to them and you push them too much. Those are two things you must not do—talk about your business and hurry the people. If you will put yourself in my hands for four days I'll sell something for you."

It was done, and the two went together to call on a rich implement-dealer. The traveling man every now and then wanted to talk ploughs, but his friend, who acted as interpreter, talked of everything else. Finally they dined with the old Mexican, and over a bottle of cognac the interpreter casually remarked that his friend represented an implement firm, and had a lot of samples at Durango. The old man merely answered that he might go over and look at them. The implement man waited three days and would have gone, but the friend made him wait the full time. The old merchant went to Durango the next day, and, after looking around a little, ordered six carloads. He hardly seemed to care what the price was, and the implement man was sure that he did not realize how many ploughs could be put in a car. He explained, but the old man simply repeated his order and drew up a check for the amount on the spot.—Kansas City Times.

ENERGIES MISTREATED.

Did you ever stop to think that if one-half the anxiety expended in teaching a child not to eat with its knife were directed toward teaching it to be charitable and pure, truthful and sweet-hearted the world would be a better inn to tarry at? It is horrid and vulgar and all that, of course, to put a knife between one's lips, but put it there and keep it there, say I, to all eternity, rather than give room to scornful words and bits of scandal. As for me, I shall grow gray-headed perhaps, and decrepit if the Lord spares me; my children's children shall rise up and call me grandmother, the friends of my youth shall wane also as wanes the harvest moon, but even down to and through the palsy of life's decline I shall protect my right to take up a bit of elusive potato with whatever utensil it seemeth easiest to avail myself of.

I do not think the angel who guards the celestial gate will stop to ask so much whether we used our knives in eating as whether we slashed and stabbed at each other with weapons of scandal and undiscriminating hate. There will be worse things charged against us, I am thinking, than the breach of social amenities or the failure in conventional usages. The question propounded will take hold of deeper matter, and our entrance into the great company of the elect shall depend on graver issues. So let us spend less time in polishing the externals; let us look to it that not only the fabric of the character we weave grows glistening and white, but also that the texture is firm and there are no dropped stitches and shoddy warp for the light of

The proportion of women whose daily lot is hard labor of some kind or other is not greater now than it has been in other periods. On the contrary, it is probably smaller. But at no former time has the wage-earning woman been so distinct a social and economic factor. Woman's work was formerly hedged in very closely by domestic conditions. Her life was a part of the life of some family, and as an unattached industrial unit she was practically non-existent. Newer conditions have obviously changed all this; and every city has its army of young working-women seeking an independent livelihood, just as it has its larger army of young men. The army of young working-men in great towns—young men wholly unattached and fighting the battle of life upon their individual resources—has not been very long recognized as a distinct social element, and one for which peculiar provision should be made. But its recognition has been more general, and there has been better provision made for it than for the other army of young working-women.

Yet the position of the young women is much the more difficult. The kinds of work open to women are not half so numerous as those that young men can enter. And women's wages average little more than half as much as their brother's. The practical difficulties in the way of procuring employment are especially great for young women, and conventional obstacles lie everywhere. The rights, the needs, the wants of working-girls call for agitation and for organized action. And in many ways the movement has begun. —From "A Model Working-Girls' Club," by Albert Shaw, in February Scribner.

VISTAS.

When the wind storms go by with a shout
and the stern sea-caves
Exult in the tramp and the roar of onsetting waves,
Then, then, it comes home to the heart that the top of life
Is the passion that burns the blood in the act of strife—
Till you pity the dead low down in their quiet graves.

But to drowse with the fen behind and the fog before,
When the rain-rot spreads and a tame sea
mumbles the shore,
Not to adventure, none to fight, no right
and no wrong,
Sons of the Sword heart-sick for a stave of your sire's old song—
O you envy the blessed dead that can live
no more!

A CHILD'S GRIEF.

There is no time when young children are more deserving of tender attention than when death invades the home circle. When a little brother or sister is taken away it is the parents who are the objects of special sympathy. Friends call and speak consoling words or offer comfort through letters. Flowers and other favors testify in silent ways that they are held in loving remembrance by many hearts. If Christians, they are sustained by faith in the Saviour's words and a sweet sense of his presence. Meantime, in too many cases, the young members of the household are left to suffer silently. There is no willful neglect, but no one, unless having had a similar experience in early life, seems to understand how deeply their childish sensibilities are wounded. There is something pathetic in the intensity of a child's grief. Older persons, who are sustained by a hope of reunion beyond the grave, fail to appreciate how in a child's estimate years are as an eternity. To him the separation is final. If adults realized how these little ones cower and sob in the dark, how they brood in silence over the imagined terrors of the grave, more pains would be taken to caress and cheer them during these painful experiences from which no home is exempt.—The Congregationalist.

IN A SNOW STORM.

The snow was whirling down silently, throwing its pure beauty even over the dirty, grimy streets, sooty high chimneys and ugly square factories of the northern manufacturing town. But the poor soul who came shivering from the hospital steps into the comparatively white street did not see this unusual beauty. He was thinly clad, and the piercing north wind cut through him. He had been discharged as cured, a word which seemed a ghastly mockery if you looked at the white drawn face and heard the racking cough which shook his enfeebled frame. But what can be done in such cases? Others were waiting to take his place, and he was well enough, the doctor said, to leave. He told them in the hospital that he was going back "to t' old place," mentioning a village some miles distant, and which he had not seen for many years; for when taken ill in London he had been drawn as by a magnet northwards, and, with a sick man's longing, thought he would get well if only he could breathe again his fresh native air and see the home unvisited so long. No one knew his story, saving that he had been brought in by a friendly policeman, who found him when on his beat lying desperately ill in the shelter of a doorway. He had no friends that he could find, he said, so they admitted him.

It was the oft-told tale. John Lear was a country lad who had left home to find work, and had left, too, behind him a girl to whom he was to return when he had made a home for her. That home had never been made, nor had he had any fate but hard times. Gradually he drifted lower and lower, still, however, honestly struggling for work. He had said when leaving Mary Romer that he would not come back until he had made a home for her, and she had waited wearying through long years for news, while she, too, worked for her bread and kept her father's house till the report came that John Lear was dead. Dead, indeed, he was to her, for no word came from him—to him, too, it had ended—in illness from want and then the hospital. Now he was discharged, with the longing for home strong in him. He would make his way home; perhaps the squire or some farmer would give him work; he would not trouble Mary Romer, but he must see the old place. This last desire overpowered all others.

It was a weary tramp, always through the blinding snow, to his destination. Hard enough for a whole man in such weather, but well nigh impossible to him in his weakness. But he was true north country in pluck and doggedness. His poor thin clothes clung to him, though the heavy drops gathered often on his forehead, and his worn boots got clogged with snow, but he trudged on patiently, asking no help, pausing only when his cough caught him with sharp pain, and he had to stand still to ease his panting breath. He had a little money which had been given him by the kindly doctors to help him, for his honest, simple courage had won on them, but it was his fixed idea that this must be kept to pay for food and lodging when he reached the village, so that he might not disgrace his name by returning a beggar.

Resting perforce at intervals, spending as little as possible on food just to help him on, he walked through the day. Nightfall came. Still the snow swirled down, making drifts by the hedges, and stinging his face as it eddied round him in the wind. The smoky town was far behind, he was among his own wolds now, and in spite of leveling, obliterating effects of snow, his eager eyes traced well-known landmarks in the dim light.

"It is but a sma' bit now," he muttered, "I mus see t' old place, though they are all gone, most like." A cottage or two by the road and twinkling lights further on showed he was nearing the village. "It is her house, but I couldna go there," he went on, as he passed a small cottage. "I'll knock at the farm. No one will know me," he added scornfully, "a poor clemmed body, but 'tis t' ould place, sure."

A little further on he came to a larger, more substantial house, which was the farm. Entering the gate and going up the flatting path he knocked at the door. A bright, buxom-looking woman opened it. She did not recognize him, but he knew her at a glance as Mary Romer, his old love. A little girl clung to her skirt and peeped around at the strange man. He started and stared at her. It all flashed across him. She had married Farmer Brown—he remembered now, he was an old admirer. So it was; having heard he was dead in London, that far bourne from which so few travelers returned, she had accepted her well-to-do and constant suitor, persuaded to this by friends, who urged "what use to wait for a man who, if not dead, had never vouchsafed her one word of news."

He asked hurriedly: "Could he have a warm by the fire."

"Eh, poor soul, coom in," she said, holding the door wide open, "coom in and warm: 'tis a cruel, bitter night."

Without a word he followed her into the bright warm room, with the glowing fire reflected in glints of light in the dish covers and bright polished pans. She set a chair for him by the fire, and offered him a cup of tea, a woman's panacea for every ill.

"You've traveled far and look wasty like," she said.

"Yes, I am from the hospital," he answered, and sank down wearily, coughing. He was too dazed by the light and heat and shock of seeing her to speak for some little time. She, seeing this, busied herself in getting something for him. Mechanically he took it from her.

As he grew better, his eyes followed her every movement, and he replied vaguely to her questions. "Did he know this part of the country? He was north-country by his speech."

"Yes, he knew the neighborhood; had been there."

Being a kindly, gentle woman, she put down his absent manner to his being weak and ill. All this time the little girl had been looking at him with grave childish eyes. Suddenly, as if touched by some divine instinct of pity, she went up to him and put her little hand on his knees, saying, "Poor, poor man," and stretched up on tip-toe to kiss him, thrusting at the same time into his hand a battered woolly dog, one of her treasures. The child's attempt to comfort him was too much; a sort of sob burst from him. This was her child, and she looked as Mary had done when they were children together. He could bear it no longer; hastily he stooped down and kissed the child, then rose, saying: "Thank you, missus, I must be goin' on my way."

In vain she begged him to stay till her man came home; he still refused. As he passed out of the door he turned and asked: "Maybe you know is any of the family of Lear left hereabout?"

A shadow passed over her face.

"They are all dead or gone away."

"Aye, so I've heard," he answered, and went out into the night.

Where should he go? He had no friends who would know him. He walked down the pathway and heard the door shut behind him. He staggered from weakness almost fell.

"Aye, but I will never disgrace her. By the look in her eyes she has not forgotten old days. Eh, mun, but she's bonny yet," he murmured to himself. In the darkness he made out a shed by the path. He must rest a few minutes more. He turned aside and crept in at the open door. Here he sat down, leaning against some wood stacked there, trying to think. The snow drifted in on him unheeded; his thoughts had gone back to the past. Why was all getting so clear to him? His old home, the kitchen with its ruddy ing the evening hymn, "Glory to thee, my God, this night," as she went about the wood fire, on little stools, talking of what they would do when they were big. How bright and happy they were, mother listening to and smiling at their childish fancies. Such a sense of relief was coming over his aching limbs. The door opened and a tall figure came in and stood by him. Who was it? Was it the kind, grave doctor who had fought death for him? The form bent over him, and a voice said: "John Lear, you have had a hard fight, but you have kept honest. Rest comes to all;" and a strong, tender hand was laid on his aching forehead.

"Aye, the fight's been hard, but I could work yet. Could you help me to a job?" he added, trustingly.

"I will help," said the soft deep voice, "but you must rest now."

And a deep sleep fell on the poor tired John Lear, and the forms of his mother and Mary faded. He slept quite peacefully, holding still the child's toy, which he had kept in his hand unconsciously.

In the morning the farmer came to fetch wood and found John Lear sleeping the sleep which has no awakening to pain, cold or want. The snow had nearly covered him and made his winding sheet. No one knew him; this shattered man had no likeness to the fresh hopeful youth who had left long years ago. He had kept his secret!

The farmer, good man, said "though he might be a tramp, still he had been his guest, and the little lass had given him her toy," he should have no pauper's funeral, so he buried him at his own expense, and himself and wife followed to the grave.

Mary never guessed that it was her old love they had laid in his last home in the quiet white churchyard and that her little child had given him his last kiss on earth.—Temple Bar.

RHYMED PHILOSOPHY.

Money borrowed is a foe,
Veiled in kindly meaning;
Money wasted is a friend
Lost beyond redeeming.

Hoarded it is like a guest
Won with anxious seeking,
Giving nothing for his board
Save the care of keeping.

Spent in good, it leaves a joy
Twice its worth behind it;
And who thus has lost it here
Shall hereafter find it.

Prevalence of Kidney Disease.

The large demand, in this and foreign lands, for BUCHU-PAIBA is the best evidence of its reliability as a remedy in Kidney and Genito-Urinary diseases, affections of the Bladder, &c. The increase in Kidney Complaints in this country in recent years has been arrested to a great extent through the merits of this new remedy BUCHU-PAIBA, which without doubt is the best known treatment for irritation, inflammation and catarrh of the Bladder, and the various diseased Genito-Urinary discharges. It is put up in convenient bottles that sell for $1.00 at Druggists or Chemists, or may be had of the manufacturer, express prepaid, by forwarding $1.00 to E. S. Wells, Jersey City, N. J.

Cockroaches, Ants,

Beetles, water bugs. The most effective and permanent remedy is—for two or three nights to sprinkle ROUGH ON RATS dry powder unmixed, on, in, about and down the sink and drain pipe; scatter it well but thinly all over the sink. First thing in the morning wash it all away down the drain pipe, repeat two or three nights, when all the insects from garret to cellar will disappear. The secret of this is in the fact that wherever the bugs or insects may be during the day, they must go to the sinks for water during the night. They can't stand ROUGH ON RATS in their water. This is the quickest, most effective and satisfactory remedy. ROUGH ON RATS being a poison, it should be used in this way only at night and washed away early in the morning. Another way is to mix a tablespoonful of ROUGH ON RATS with a half pound of brown sugar. Sprinkle it on rear of cupboard shelves or on plates, or on sheets of paper placed high out of reach of children.

WHAT DO I NEED?

A Question Which Comes Home to Us.

"What do I need? I am feeling nervous, tired, and without my old-time snap and vim."

These are the feelings of thousands at this time of year, during the change from winter to spring. They are run down with spring debility, malaria, or have overworked and overstrained brain, nerves and system, and feel dull, without energy, do not eat and sleep well; liver and bowels become torpid. Above all there is that restless nervousness, sense of anxiety, strange sensations which plainly show that the nerves are not right. There is danger in these symptoms—THE DANGER OF NERVOUS PROSTRATION, HEART FAILURE, PARALYSIS OR INSANITY.

The danger lies in neglect, however. Use Dr. Greene's Nervura, the great specific for these nervous diseases, when the first symptoms appear, and cure is sure. This wonderful discovery will calm, quiet and strengthen the nerves immediately, invigorates the brain, enriches the blood, and vitalizes the whole system. Purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists, $1.

"From the constant worry over business matters, I suffered from the loss of sleep, and became so nervous that I was entirely unfitted for business. IN FACT, I FEARED INSANITY. I used Dr. Greene's Nervura. THE EFFECT WAS ALMOST MAGICAL. I could sleep; mental composure, appetite and strength returned. Six bottles of this remedy cured me, and I have remained well to this date. I have recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura to many of my friends and neighbors and have yet to learn of a failure to obtain good results.

Last summer a German named Cremer, who made a journey to Spitzbergen, discovered thick beds of coal there and at Bear Island. His trip lasted only six weeks, but it was long enough for Cremer to ascertain that coal mining is quite possible there, although, perhaps, owing to the climate, not always in a regular manner. The thickest beds of coal are on the east coast of Bear island, and are about 500 feet thick. Along the Spitzbergen coast coal was found in layers about a yard and a half thick. The curious discovery was made at King's bay of the grave of a Dutch sailor, with the date 1741 as clearly written as if made the day before.

WHEN?

We'll read that book we'll sing that song.
But when? Oh, when the days are long;
When thoughts are free and voices clear;
Some happy time within the year.
The days troop by with noiseless tread,
The song unsung, the book unread.

We'll see that friend, and make him feel
The weight of friendship, true as steel;
Some flower of sympathy bestow,
But time sweeps on with steady flow,
Until with quick, reproachful tear,
We lay our flowers upon his bier.

And still we walk the desert sands,
And still with trifles fill our hands,
While ever just beyond our reach,
A fairer purpose shows to each,
The deeds we have not done, but willed,
Remain to haunt us—unfulfilled.

WILL NOT GO WEST.

Brooklyn, Feb. 20.—Frank Uhlman, president of the Brooklyn elevated railroad company, says the statement that his company has bought the controlling interest in the Chicago elevated roads and will build them, is without any foundation. He says he is not interested in the scheme.

DANGERS ON THE OCEAN.

Numbers of Abandoned Vessels Drifting Along the Highways.

The abandoning of the Abyssinia adds one more to the long list of vessels knocking about the ocean at the mercy of winds, waves, and currents. When she was left there seemed but little doubt that she would sink beneath the waves and cease to become a danger to navigation, but she had not gone down at the time the rescuing steamer parted from her, and so she must be looked out for by all vessels passing near that locality.

One recommendation of the International maritime conference was that the various nations having commerce on the high seas should patrol the ocean within certain fixed limits and endeavor to free the routes from obstructions of every kind. This would include towing steamers into port that had lost their propellers, sailing ships that were dismasted, vessels that were so much damaged by collision as to need assistance, and, in fact, to relieve the needy of every description and to rid the highways of all dangers. Unfortunately the measure failed to become a law, but the necessities of the case have by no means ceased to exist.

The regular monthly Pilot Chart, as issued by the hydrographic office, contains, in addition to a vast amount of valuable data, tracks which show graphically the courses taken by the derelicts, so that masters of vessels leaving port may redouble their vigilance upon approaching the dangerous section in which the wanderer was last seen, or to which it may have drifted since the report was made. Many of these vessels have been drifting here and there for months, and scarcely a day passes that some one of them is not reported by incoming vessels.

Some of these are bottom side up, and when first sighted look like the body of a huge whale; or if the sea is breaking over them the white foam of the broken water catches the eye, and "Breakers ahead!" is what the lookout reports. Others have shifted their cargoes and are listed away over on one side or the other—so far that it seems a perfect wonder that they have not "turned turtle" long ago. Now and then one is sighted with her bow high up out of the water, while her stern is out of sight, while the next one seen is tilted in the opposite direction, as though she were all ready to take a header.

The majority of accidents occur to vessels when in the vicinity of Cape Hatteras; and when abandoned these vessels are generally carried along by the Gulf Stream, thus drifting into the ocean highway and towards the coast of Great Britain, until they either strike those far-off shores or become so waterlogged that they sink. Occasionally they drift to the eastward and get out of the Gulf Stream, owing to strong westerly winds.—New York World.

HE WILL KEEP QUIET.

The Young Married Man in a Peck of Trouble Early in His Career.

A young married couple who live in an apartment house up in Madison avenue went out to dine last Sunday afternoon, and as they had allowed the servants the same privilege the apartment was deserted when they returned in the early evening. When they had disembarked from the elevator and the lord of the household began to fumble for keys he was horrified to discover that they were either lost or snugly escorted at that moment in some other and inaccessible pocket.

"Carrie," he said in stricken tones, "I think—I'm afraid—that is, I—I've left my keys!"

"You don't mean it?" she ejaculated.

"I really do," he said, fumbling nervously in impossible nooks and crannies of clothing for the longed-for bunch.

"The elevator boy of course has a key," announced his wife. "Call him."

"There are only two, and we have them both," he answered briefly, still fumbling in a hopeless way.

"Can you pick the lock, Edward?" she asked.

"I was not educated for a burglar, Caroline."

"Then we must send for a locksmith."

"To-night—no shops are open. I am afraid we must either break the door, or send for the superintendent," he said decisively.

They rang the bell for the elevator, and sat dismally on the stairs till it came.

It is a terrible thing to sit on an apartment house stair and look at your own door closed against you.

"John," said the keyless proprietor when the elevator arrived, "have you a key that will fit our door?"

"No, sir."

"Is the superintendent in the building?"

"He has went to Harlem, sir, to spend the evening."

"Two groans.

"John, you are not a large man."

"No, sir."

"Do you suppose" (with a gleam of hope) "that if I offered you a dollar and boosted, you could squeeze through the transom?"

"I might try, sir."

"I wish you would." There was a rattle of coins followed by much shuffling, pushing and squirming, and at length only a pair of irregular elevator boy legs capped by a pair of dilapidated shoes remained in sight. Having gone that far, John stuck.

"Hi, there," came in muffled tones from the hall inside.

"Yes."

"Try the door."

The buckless flat owner turned the knob, and to his astonishment the door opened, and inside, hanging in the lock, was the bunch of keys.

"Caroline," he whispered. "The door's open—wasn't locked at all."

"Well, you're a careless thing and you ought to be ashamed of yourself for leaving the flat unlocked," she declared emphatically.

But her husband did not hear. He gave a pull at the dangling humanity over the door and landed it on the inside.

"John," he said anxiously. "You can keep quiet sometimes?"

"Sometimes, sir."

"Here's another dollar. You understand."

How to Use Gloves.

A glove usually wears out first at the end of the fingers. This is because the nails are too long and push through the kid. The first place to wear through is the flat part of the left thumb. Most people put on the left glove and fasten it before drawing on the right glove, and then they use the left thumb and fingers as buttoners. That is what ruins the glove. Use a glove buttoner; they cost nothing, the wire ones, bent like a hairpin, and joined with a little chain ending in a flat pendant, which any glove dealer has in quantity, and then are the salvation of a good pair of gloves. Get into the habit of using the buttoner and the gloves will last twice as long.

DWELLERS IN THE ARCTICS.

Something Concerning the People of Upper Greenland.

In 1813, Sir John Ross discovered an isolated race of human beings numbering about two hundred souls, living on the inhospitable shores of North Greenland. To this community he gave the name of "Arctic Highlanders," a name which unfortunately is misleading; for they are littoral people and cannot inhabit the arctic highland, as it is an everlasting ice-cap, and moreover they will not even visit it, for this inland ice is to them a reign of terror; a land where abide their demons and evil spirits.

At the present day they number, as near as can be estimated, about the same as when the knowledge of them came to the civilized world; nor have they increased their territory, but live on the narrow strip of mountainous coast, which is left bare during the summer months, by the retreat of the winter snows. They could not be more cut off from other human beings, did they live on some small oceanic island. Practically they do live on an island, for they are surrounded by water; by great expanses of solid water; for they never pass the ice barrier of the great Humboldt glacier, with its sea face of 60 miles; they never ascend to the summer foot of the "ice-blink," some 2,000 feet above sea level; nor attempt to wander south over the vast ice-floes of Melville bay, 100 miles in extent.

At 70 degrees north latitude, near the southern edge of the Humboldt glacier, is a collection of huts known as Etah, their most northern settlement, while at Cape York, in latitude 70 degrees, 55 minutes, is their southern limit, and which, as near as we could determine by the sign language, they call Pitanito. Their country may be said to be about 185 miles long and from three to five miles in breadth.—February Scribner.
